RESPONDENT.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9—Plaintiff in joint possession with defendant—Court, whether can restore such possession.

A Court has no power to give joint possession to the plaintiff and the defendant in a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act [p. 721, col. 2.]

Hari Narsin Das v. Eleman Bibi, 23 Ind. Cas. 618; 19 C. L. J. 117, followed.

Sabapathi Chetti v. Subaraya Chetti, 3 M. 250, distinguished.

Appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair, in Civil Revision Petition No. 428 of 1912, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Panruti, in Civil Suit No. 247 of 1911.

FACTS.—Plaintiff sued on the 28th April 1911 for recovery of possession of certain lands, alleging that he had been in possession for 12 years prior to the suit but that the defendants had taken possession of them on the 16th November 1910. Defendants denied the claim and contended that the plaintiff's claim was barred, as he was not in possession within six months prior to the suit. The District Munsif found that plaintiff's evidence as to possession within six months prior to suit was unreliable and that defendants' predecessor-in-title had been admittedly in possession till 5th September 1910. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On revision to the High Court the case was sent back for a finding whether the plaintiff was actually in possession within six months before the date of suit and if the possession was not such as could entitle him to maintain the suit, what the nature of that possession was. In compliance with the order of the High Court, the District Munsif submitted a finding to the effect that the plaintiff was not in exclusive possession of the lands in suit within six months prior to suit, that he was only in joint possession with others of whom defendants' predecessor-in-title was one and that such possession did not entitle him to a decree. On a return of the finding, Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaint was presented on the 28th April 1911. The plaintiff was in actual possession, but the defendant took exclusive possession on the 15th or 16th November 1911. This possession of the plaintiff is found by the Munsif to have been not exclusive, but only joint with one Pavadai Asari who is found to be the predecessor-in-title of the defendant. The Munsif also states that even if he converted his joint possession into exclusive possession, it was a trespass and such possession will not be protected under section 9 of the Act.

Thus the plaintiff alleges exclusive possession, but it is found to have been joint possession with Pavadai Asari and the defendant took exclusive possession within six months before suit. The Munsif on these facts was wrong in dismissing the suit. The plaintiff is entitled to be restored to the possession which he held before he was dispossessed by the defendant. Such possession may be or may not be in law joint possession with Pavadai Asari. But it was certainly not joint possession with the defendant. The defendant may be entitled to step into the shoes of his vendor but as the plaintiff claims to hold to his exclusion, he cannot be considered to be in a better position than a vendee from the plaintiff himself whose title to possession is not admitted by the plaintiff and who dispossesses him without his consent. I think he is now entitled to his decree under the Specific Relief Act. The decree of the Munsif is reversed and there will be a decree for the plaintiff with costs throughout."

Against this judgment, a Letters Patent Appeal was filed by defendants.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer for Mr. C. Padmanabha Aiyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The District Munsif no doubt found in terms against the plaintiff on issue 1. But we understand the learned Judge as having been unable to accept parts of the judgment as reconcilable with that finding and as having, therefore, thought it necessary to obtain a proper finding after making sure that all material considerations had been dealt with. We are not prepared to hold that he was not entitled to do this in revision.

The question then is only of the propriety of the order he eventually passed, giving the plaintiff a decree with costs throughout, although the finding (accepted by him), was that the plaintiff was entitled to joint possession with the defendants. In Hari Narain Das v. Elemjan Bibi (1) it was held that a Court had no power to give joint possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

In Sabapathi Chetti v. Subraya Chetti (2) the decision was only that a person, whose possession has been partially disturbed, can be restored to possession under that provision. We follow the Calcutta decision, and allow the Letters Patent Appeal with costs, dismissing the civil revision petition with costs.

Appeal accepted.

Possession in lieu of dower Lien.

A decree-holder in execution of a consent decree passed against his judgment-debtors as heirs of a debtor attached a house. One of the judgment-debtors, a young pardanashin lady, objected to the attachment. It appeared that by an arrangement arrived at between her and other judgment-debtors she had been placed in possession of the house in lieu of the dower due to her. Among other pleas, she contended that as she was a minor at the date of the decree, she was not bound by it.
The executing Court dismissed the objection but on appeal her objection was allowed. On second appeal:

Miscellaneous appeal from the order of the Court of the Divisional Judge Delhi Division, dated the 21st March 1912, reversing that of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 14th December 1911.

Messrs. Nanak Chand and Muhammad
Rafi, for the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi,
K. B., for the Appellants.

Messrs. Fazal-i-Hussain and Santanam and Sheikh Gulab Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This following family
table will be useful in considering the questions that arise in this appeal:—

Zahir-ud-din=Musammat Nur Jahan Begam,
defendant No. 2

Riaz-ud-din=Musammat Safdri Begam,
defendant No. 3.

Razi-ud-din,
defendant No. 1.

Zahir-ud-din died on the 5th December 1906, leaving very considerable property, and a widow Musammat Nur Jahan Begam, defendant No. 2. His son Riaz-uddin died on the 26th January 1909, leaving a young widow Musammat Safdri Begam, defendant No. 3.

After the death of Riaz-ud-din, a deed of partition of the property left by Zahirud-din was executed on the 28th March 1909 between the three defendants and by this deed, which was duly registered, a certain house was assigned to Musammat Safdri Begam in lieu of her claim of Rs. 25,000 as the deferred dower due to her from her deceased husband Riaz-ud-din, the deed stating that the value of Riazud-din's share in his father's property was Rs. 47,000.

It is not denied that Musammat Safdri Begum, in virtue of this arrangement, thereafter obtained possession of the said house. On the 4th May 1910, plaintiffs Jhabban Lal and Nathali Mal brought a suit against all three defendants for recovery of a sum of Rs. 3,414-1-3 due on a bond executed by Riaz-ud-din and of a sum of Rs. 2,000 due on promissory notes executed by the same person, and on the 28th July 1910 obtained a consent decree against all three defendants for the full amount claimed and costs. This decree runs as follows:—

"It is also further ordered that the decree will be executed against all the defendants to the extent of property of Riaz-ud-din, deceased, in their hands and also against the person of defendant No. 1. It is also further ordered that this decree is not to be executed for six months from this date, during which time the defendants will not alienate in any way any property of the deceased in their hands without the permission of the Court and will pay into Court what they realise by such transfer up to the decretal amount, including

JHABAN LAL V. SAFDRI BEGAM.

Before proceeding, we may here note that Musammat Safdri Begam is described by the Divisional Judge, writing in March 1912, as a "young parlanahsin lady of barely eighteen years of age." And this young lady must, therefore, at the time of the decree (July 1910) have been about 16 years old (see also the statement of her brother Mirza Hamid Ali Khan made on the 29th November 1911). It is also to be noted that about a year prior to the date of the decree, she had been given possession of the house in question in satisfaction of her undoubted and incontestable right to claim Rs. 25,000 as deferred dower from her late husband's estate, and she had been given possession of this house by the heirs of her husband. In these circumstances, there is ample authority for holding that she became, to all intents and purposes, a mortgagee of the house and was entitled to retain possession thereof until satisfaction of her dower claim [See, e. g., Ghazidin v. Fakir Bakhsh (1); Ali Bakhsh v. Allahdad Khan (2); Ramzan Ali Khan v. Asghari Begam (3); Musammat Bebee Bachun v. Sheikh Hamid Hossein (4); Azizullah Khan v. Ahmad Ali Khan (5); Banoo Begum v. Mir Aun Ali (6); Tahir-un-nissa v. Nawab Hasan (7), etc.] So far, then, as this house was concerned, there was no conceivable reason why she should have consented to a decree which might have imperilled her rights, as her lien over the property fully protected those rights as against such claimants as plaintiffs.

But she was a young parlanashin girl and was obviously duped by the other parties to the litigation, which resulted in the "consent decree," and everything points to the possibility that the decree-holders and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 conspired against her. That such may have been the case is, we think, a fair inference from the facts that though she was a minor at the time, no guardian ad litem appears to have been appointed, and that though there is ample other property belonging to the estate of Riaz-ud-din in the hands of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the decree-holders, as soon as the period of six months specified in the decree had elapsed, forthwith proceeded to attach the house in the possession of defendant No. 3. The first court unfortunately did not realise how defendant No. 3 had apparently been defrauded and, therefore, rejected her objection to the attachment on the ground that she was "estopped" from denying the force of the consent decree. It is to be regretted that the learned District Judge who had the minority of the girl brought to his notice did not, in deciding that she was "estopped" from contesting the decree, keep in mind the fact that defendant No. 3 was at the time of decree very young, if not a minor, and had nothing to gain but everything to lose by consenting to a decree which greatly prejudiced her undoubted rights.

The Divisional Judge reversed the order of the District Judge and upheld the objections urged by defendant No. 3, and in our opinion quite rightly. The decree is open to the gravest suspicions so far as it affects the rights of Musammat Safdri Begam and is highly suggestive of trickery practised upon her. But assuming that we cannot in these proceedings go behind the decree, we have no hesitation in holding that, properly construed, that decree merely amounts to this that the decree-holder is entitled to attach the house in her possession but that it does not give him the right to ignore the lien which she has, in law and equity, upon that house to the extent of her dower claim of Rs. 25,000. The order under appeal probably goes too far in declaring that the house cannot be attached at all, and we, therefore, accept the appeal to the extent of varying the declaration pro tanto. In other words, we declare that the house in question is liable to attachment, but that such attachment is subject to the objector's lien over the house to the extent of Rs. 25,000. As we practically uphold the order of the Divisional Judge, we direct appellants to pay respondent's costs in this Court. Mr. Santanam for defendant No. 1 contends that he was wrongly impleaded as a Three suits were brought for the recovery of moneys due to the plaintiff Bank on promissory notes executed by one M deceased, who at the time of his death was a member of the plaintiff Bank. The defendant No. 1, who was the son of M, became member of the society on the death of his father. One of the bye-laws of the plaintiff society laid down: "If the heir or successor-in-interest is elected, all rights and liabilities of the deceased member shall devolve on him."

Appeal against an order of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 22nd February 1915, exercising Small Cause Court powers.

Mr. Haidar Husain, for the Applicant.

Mr. St. U. Thompson, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—These three applications are made under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act for revision of three orders passed by the Munsif of Fyzabad. The facts are as follows. Three suits were brought by the village Co-operative Bank, Anguri Bagh, Fyzabad, against three defendants, Kali Din, Debi and Chhedi. Of these, the first defendant

Kali Din was the son of one Mangal. The suits were brought for recovery of moneys said to be due to the plaintiff Bank on promissory notes executed by this deceased Mangal. The second and third defendants in the case were sureties for the payment of the debts contracted by the deceased Mangal. Mangal was a member of the plaintiff Bank at the time of his death and it is an admitted fact that after his father's death the defendant Kali Din became a member of the society and was a member at the time these suits were brought. The question which has arisen here is as to the extent of the liability of Kali Din for the payment of the debts due on the promissory notes in question. The case for the plaintiff in the Court below was that Kali Din was responsible in the same manner as if he had executed the promissory notes himself. The view which was taken by the Munsif was that Kali Din was only responsible for these debts to the extent of the assets which he had inherited from his father. In support of the case put forward by the plaintiff society, bye-laws were produced, of which bye-law No. 12 lays down that "if a member dies and if his heir or successor-in-interest is eligible for admission as a member, it shall be open to the general meeting to elect such heir or successor-in-interest as a member in place of the deceased, but the general meeting shall not be bound to do so, nor shall the heir or successor-in-interest of a deceased member be bound to join as a member. If the heir or successor-in-interest is elected, all rights and liabilities of the deceased member shall devolve on him". It is admitted that these bye-laws were framed under the old Co-operative Credit Societies Act, X of 1904, but by virtue of section 49 of the new Act, II of 1912, these bye-laws are in force so far as they are not inconsistent with the express provisions of the new Act. The learned Munsif seems to question the validity of this particular bye-law which was relied upon by the plaintiff society, and for various reasons, he seems to have considered it ultra vires of the society. I am unable to agree with this view of the matter. The whole argument of the learned Munsif seems to me to rest upon a misconception of the relation existing between this defendant Kali Din and the plaintiff Bank. This is not a case in which the Bank is trying to enforce a liability, incurred towards it by the deceased Mangal, against his legal representative Kali Din. If that were so, then no doubt the view of the Munsif would be correct and Kali Din would not be liable to a greater extent than that of the assets which he has received from his father. That is the ordinary law; but Kali Din was not being sued as the legal representative of his father, but on the footing of his being a member of the plaintiff society and of his having contracted to become a member of the society on the terms laid down in the bye-law No. 12. There can be no doubt that when Kali Din joined the society as a member he, by acceptance of the bye-law in question, became entitled to all the rights and subject to all the liabilities of his deceased father. I fail to see why this bye-law should in any way be held ultra vires. The only reason which the Munsif can give is that it enhances the liability of Kali Din and imposes upon him more responsibility than would have rested on him had he merely been the legal representative of his father; but his liability is more than that of a legal representative, because he has undertaken all the rights and liabilities of his father by joining the society. I can see no reason why in the interest of these Co-operative Societies, a rule of this sort should not be made, and so far as I can see, there is no provision either in the old or in the new Co-operative Credit Societies Act rendering the bye-law ultra vires. The position is clear enough to me. It seems to me that Kali Din is not entitled to plead that he is only responsible to the extent of the assets which he has received from his father. I allow these applications and direct that the decrees of the Court below be amended so as to make Kali Din fully responsible for the debts in question and not merely responsible to the extent of the estate which he has inherited from his father. The applicants will have their costs in all the Courts.

The general principles for extending time in winding up appeal cases are as follows:

(i) The object of the Act (VI of 1882) being that matters should be settled speedily and that winding-up proceedings should not be protracted unduly, an extension of time will not be granted except under 'special' circumstances; [p. 726, col. 1.]

(ii) in the absence of 'special' circumstances, a litigant who has obtained a judgment which, by expiration of the time limited for appeal, has become absolute, ought not to be deprived of it; [p. 726, col. 1.]

(iii) a person who applies for an extension of time must show, not an equity properly so-called, but something which entitles him to ask for the indulgence of the Court to relieve him from the legal bar that is imposed by the Act of the Legislature. [p. 726, col. 1.]

BISHEN DAS V. LIQUIDATOR, DOABA BANK, LTD.

Messrs. Santanam and Rup Ram and Lala Dharam Das Suri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the course of winding up the Doaba Bank, Limited, the then Official Liquidator applied to the Additional Judge, Amritsar, for sanction to a proposal made by him on behalf of certain of the Directors, but this application was rejected by order dated the 11th January 1915. An appeal has been preferred by the Directors interested in that application and it is not now disputed that the provisions of section 169 of Act VI of 1882 are applicable to it. A preliminary objection has been raised by Mr. Santanam to the effect that the appeal is time-barred, inasmuch as notice of the appeal was not served upon respondents within three weeks of the date of the order under appeal. This period of three weeks admittedly expired on the 1st February 1915, while the present appeal was filed in this Court on the 15th February. Mr. Santanam points out that the memorandum of appeal does not attempt to explain the delay; that it contains no prayer for extension of time; and that there is no separate petition on that behalf filed by the appellants. The appeal was laid in due course before a Judge in Chambers and was admitted to a hearing by an ex parte order dated the 23rd February, but so far as we can see from the record, the learned Judge was not asked to extend the period prescribed by section 169 of the Act.

Obviously, the appeal is barred under the strict provisions of section 169, but it is, of course, open to this Court to extend the time if good cause be shown for the grant of such indulgence.

The general principles applicable to cases of this kind are as follows:—

(1) The object of the Act being that matters should be settled speedily, and that winding-up proceedings should not be protracted unduly, an extension of time will not be granted except under "special" circumstances;

(2) in the absence of special circumstances, a litigant who has obtained a judgment which, by expiration of the time limited for appeal, has become absolute, ought not to be deprived of it; and

(3) a person who applies for an extension of time must show, "not an equity properly so-called, but something which entitles him to ask for the indulgence of the Court to relieve him from the legal bar that is imposed by the Act of the Legislature" [Buckley's Companies Act, 9th Edition, page 415, and Lakhmidas Khimji Spinning and Weaving Company, Ltd., In re Goverdhandas Khattao v. Sanders Slater (1).]

It is impossible to define, with any attempt at precision, the "special circumstances" which would entitle a person to ask for an extension of time, but there is ample authority for the proposition that he will not be granted the indulgence unless he can satisfy the Court that he himself has acted with reasonable diligence and that the delay in prosecuting his appeal was due either to the respondent's conduct or to some action or inaction on the part of the Court below [see Daulat Ram v. Woollen Mills Company, Ltd., Delhi (2), Sultan Singh v. Badhawa Singh (3), Hira Lal v. Himalaya Glass Works Company (4), Tara Chand v. Official Liquidators of People's Bank of India, Ltd. (5), East India Distilleries and Sugar Factories v. Tinnevely Sarangapani Sugar Mills Co., Ltd (6), Ramonappa v. Official Liquidators Bellary (7) and Lakhmidas Khimji Spinning and Weaving Company, Ltd., In re, Goverdhandas Khattao v. Sanders Slater (1).]

The facts upon which appellants rely as explanatory of the delay and as affording ground for the Court to extend the ordinary period prescribed by the Act, are set forth in the affidavit of Mr. Gokal Chand, one of the appellants, and are not controverted by Mr. Santanam. From this affidavit, it would appear that the Directors heard on the 16th January that the Official Liquidator's application had been rejected and that Mr. Gokal Chand thereupon wrote to the Official Liquidators asking for an attested copy of the Court's orders. Before proceeding, we may here observe that no explanation has been given why the Directors did not apply direct to the Court for the copy. On the 17th January Mr. Gokal Chand and another Director, Rai Bahadur Bishen Das, consulted Counsel with a view to an appeal being preferred to this Court and were informed that an attested copy of the order was necessary before any such appeal could be filed. The order in question was short and a copy of it could have been obtained, by the payment of what is known as an "urgent fee," within a few hours and at no appreciable expense. We may fairly assume also that Counsel had impressed upon his clients the necessity of filing the appeal without delay. But the Directors apparently preferred to wait until they heard from the Official Liquidator in reply to Mr. Gokal Chand's letter of the 16th January. On the 20th January, a reply was received from the Official Liquidator who, however, sent them merely an unattested copy of the Court's order. Again no action was taken on receipt of this letter till the 23rd January, when Rai Bahadur Bishen Das wrote to Counsel in Amritsar, asking him to obtain an attested copy of the said order. Here, too, no explanation is given why nothing was done between the 20th and the 23rd January.

Having written his letter of the 23rd January, Rai Bahadur Bishen Das took no further action till the 27th January. On the latter date, as he had received no reply from his Counsel in Amritsar, he telegraphed to one Lala Girdhari Lal to apply for an attested copy and on the same day Mr. Gokal Chand himself went to Amritsar to ask for an explanation from Counsel as to the delay. If Mr. Gokal Chand could go to Amritsar on 27th January, we see no reason why he could not have gone or sent one of his employees on the 7th January. On the 27th January, Counsel at Amritsar sent the Directors copies of various proceedings but not a copy of the order from which the appeal was to be preferred, and these copies were received on the 28th with a letter informing the Directors that the record was to be sent to this Court. Mr. Gokal Chand thereupon enquired from the office of this Court whether the record had arrived, but could get no definite information. It is said (and quite correctly) that the 29th and 30th January were Court holidays and on the latter date, Mr. Gokal Chand again telegraphed to his friend at Amritsar, Lala Girdhari Lal, to obtain the requisite copy. A reply was received on the 2nd February to the effect that the record was in the Court of Rai Bahadur Damodar Das at Lahore. No attempt was made to obtain a copy of the order from the latter Court, but on the 3rd February Mr. Gokal Chand went to consult Counsel in Lahore but found that the learned gentleman whom he had engaged on the 17th January was away from the station, and though there had already been great delay in obtaining the copy, it did not strike Mr. Gokal Chand as necessary to get the copy from the Court of Rai Bahadur Damodar Das till the 4th or 5th February. On one of these dates, (he is not sure which) he instructed his Counsel's clerk to obtain the copy. As a matter of fact, application for the copy was made on the 6th February and the copy was supplied on the 8th February.

The period of three weeks had now already elapsed, but the appellants proceeded in the same leisurely fashion as they had done up to this time. The memorandum of appeal was drafted and was ready for presentation on the 10th February, but it was not till the 15th February that the appeal was actually filed in this Court, and even then the memorandum of appeal contained no prayer for an extension of time.

Such are the admitted facts, and we cannot find any ground to justify us in granting appellants an indulgence which is granted rarely and only in circumstances which show that the appellant has exhibited reasonable diligence. In the present case, it would have been quite easy for appellants to obtain the copy direct from the Court within a day or two after they had consulted Counsel on the 17th January, and this too without incurring any great expense. They elected, however, to proceed in a leisurely manner, though they must have known the urgent necessity for prompt action, and as a result they must suffer the consequence. They have not attempted in any case to explain how it was that they did not file their appeal till the 15th February, despite the fact that the period of limitation had long since expired, when they obtained the copy of the Court's order on the 8th February.

In our opinion, no cause has been shown why we should deprive respondents of the right which accrued to them when the period for appealing expired without an appeal being preferred, and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Grant—Jagir granted by King of Oudh. Sanad granted by British Government—Grant in perpetuity, so long as there are lineal heirs, rights conferred by—Grant, construction of—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871)—Grant of villages revenue free, if pension—Document not enforceable as mortgage, whether admissible for collateral purpose—De facto guardian, effect of dealings of, on minor—Alienation of Muhammadan minor's property by unauthorized guardian, effect of—Muhammadan Law—Continuing obligation, ratification of.

A jagir granted by Wajid Ali Shah, the then King of Oudh, to his eldest son for the maintenance and support of the Prince and his children was maintained by the British Government after the annexation of Oudh. The sanad granted by the British Government provided that it having been established after due enquiry that the villages had been held in rent-free tenure under the former Government, the Chief Commissioner was pleased to maintain the tenure in perpetuity so long as there were lineal heirs subject to the conditions of loyalty, etc., specified in the sanad.

Held, that the grant in question conferred a heritable and transferable estate, that the duration of the grant was to last as long as the grantee had lineal descendants existing and that the grant was to lapse or to be resumed on the happening of any of the contingencies specified therein and on no other. [p. 732, col. 1.]

A grant of villages, revenue free, in consideration of the rights held by the grantee prior to the confiscation of Oudh, does amount to a pension within the meaning of Act XXIII of 1871. [p. 732, col. 1.]

A document which is not enforceable as a mortgage may be used in evidence for a collateral purpose unconnected with the mortgage. [p. 735, col. 1.]

Although as a rule the dealings of a de facto guardian of a Muhammadan minor with the minor's property do not bind the minor, there might be cases of urgent and imperative necessity where a transaction entered into for the benefit of the minor may be binding on him. [p. 735, col. 1.]

According to the general principles of Muhammadan Law an alienation of the minor's property by an unauthorized guardian, even if it is not made for a valid cause, is neither void nor voidable, but its validity or invalidity is only determined by the minor adopting or not adopting it after he has attained majority though the effect of his decision will relate back to the date of the inception of the transaction. [p. 736, col. 1.]

In the case of a continuing obligation, such as the engagement of a servant or the continuance of a tenancy, an absence of repudiation or the acceptance of service or rent with full knowledge of the facts, implies an undertaking to adhere to the obligation and operates as a ratification or renewal of the old contract by the party accepting the service or rent. [p. 736, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 21st December 1910.

Messrs. Sami Ullah Beg, Wazir Hasan and Farzand Ali, for the Appellants.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Salig Ram, for the Respondents Nos. 11 to 13.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents Nos. 4 and 32.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of a suit brought by some of the heirs of Prince Hamid Ali for possession of certain jagir villages by redemption of a mortgage effected by an award, dated the 21st March 1877, and for the rendition of accounts and the recovery of surplus mesne profits appertaining to the mortgaged property.

The jagir was granted by Wajid Ali Shah, the then King of Oudh, to his eldest son, Prince Hamid Ali, for the maintenance and support of the Prince and his children, and was maintained by the British Government after the annexation of Oudh. Prince Hamid Ali died on the 8th July 1874, leaving a widow, Nawab Kaukab Mahal, three sons, Muhammad Mirza, Shappar Mirza and Qurratulain, and a daughter, Nawab Dilband Begam. Plaintiff No. 5 and defendants Nos. 21, 22 and 23 are the heirs of Muhammad Mirza, who died in 1887. Plaintiffs Nos.

HUSAIN ALI MIRZA V. MUHAMMAD AZIM KHAN.

3 and 4 are the heirs of Shapper Mirza, who died in 1889. Plaintiff No. 2 is the son and defendant No. 23 is the widow of Qurratulain, who died in 1902. After the death of Prince Hamid Ali, Mahdi Quli Khan, the predecessor-in-title of defendants Nos. 1 to 10 and 26 to 43, brought forward a claim to recover certain debts, said to have been due by the Prince, which, at the suggestion of the ex-King, was referred to the arbitration of the Political Agent in Calcutta. On the 21st March 1877, the Political Agent made an award declaring Mahdi Quli Khan entitled to Rs. 36,836-4-5 and allowing him to retain possession of the jagir which was under his management on behalf of the Prince during his life-time, till the aforesaid debt with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum was liquidated. The plaintiffs stated that the said award operated as a mortgage in favour of Mahdi Quli Khan and that the mortgage money was satisfied from the income of the jagir, including the price fetched by the sale of kaukar and trees, and the compensation money realized by the mortgagee in respect of a portion of the jagir property. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the defendants did not render any accounts to the plaintiffs and were refusing to give back possession, asserting a right to retain possession under certain leases and mortgages executed by Prince Muhammad Mirza, the eldest son of Prince Hamid Ali, to which Shapper Mirza and Qurratulain, the predecessors-in title of the plaintiffs, are said to have assented. The plaintiffs averred that they were not bound by the said deeds, but if for any reason the Court found that those deeds were binding on them and that any money was due to the defendants under those deeds or under the award, they were willing to pay whatever money might be found due on the same.

The claim was resisted chiefly by defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and 7, 19, 31 and 37, who are some of the heirs of Mahdi Quli Khan, and by defendants Nos. 11 to 14, who profess to be in possession of the jagir villages, save Kanausi and Sadrauna, under certain leases and mortgages effected by Jafar Quli Khan, one of the sons of Mahdi Quli Khan. Defendant No. 20 is also a mortgagee from Jafar Quli Khan, but no defence was filed on his behalf. The other defendants did not put in their appearance. The defence, so far as it is material for the purpose of this appeal, was that the debt due under the award was not paid up, that the suit was premature, and that Jafar Quli Khan and his representatives-in-interest were in any case entitled to retain possession of the jagir villages under a lease executed by Muhammad Mirza, the eldest son of Prince Hamid Ali, in favour of Jafar Quli Khan on the 6th January 1882, which the other heirs of Prince Hamid Ali had ratified, and certain mortgage-deeds executed in his favour by the said heirs, till the debts therein referred to and the debts due under the award were paid. It was subsequently admitted by the contesting defendants during the hearing of the suit that the debt due under the award was satisfied from the usufruct in 1886, but it was pleaded that the claim was barred by time. The plaintiffs in reply urged that the alleged ratification by Shapper Mirza and Qurratulain was ineffectual, inasmuch as they were minors at the time of the alleged ratification, that the ratifiers had only a life-interest in the grant, and had no right to bind the succeeding life estates, and that the transfers relied on by the contesting defendants were inoperative under section 12 of the Pensions Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the grant in question conferred an absolute and transferable estate on Prince Hamid Ali and his heirs in succession, that the lease effected by Muhammad Mirza on the 6th January 1882 created a charge on the jagir villages for Rs. 25,000, that the lease was ratified by the brothers and sisters of Muhammad Mirza and was binding on the plaintiff, that the rights claimed by Jafar Quli Khan and his representatives-in-interest under the lease of the 6th January 1882 had become absolute by lapse of time and that the claim for possession was not maintainable. The heirs of Shapper Mirza and Qurratulain have separately appealed. The primary question for decision in the appeals is, whether the rights conferred by the grant of the 18th February 1861 on Prince Hamid Ali and his successors-in-interest were heritable and transferable and whether the leases and mortgages set up by the contesting defendants bar the plaintiffs' claim for possession.

The contention of the learned Counsel who appeared for the plaintiffs-appellants was that the grant conferred a succession of life-estates without any power of alienation. It is not denied that the jagir in question was obtained by the Prince under a grant made by his father, Wajid Ali Shah, when he was King of Oudh and that it was maintained by the British Government with the object of relieving the ex-King from the burden of supporting such of his relations from his pension as were maintaining themselves from the jagir properties held by them from before the annexation. The original grant was made by the ex-King sometime in 1256 Fasli or 1849 A. D., and is not forthcoming. We find, however, from certain investigations made by the Government in 1869 that the Prince held the jagir by way of a muafi grant and realised its revenue from the persons in possession. The statement of royal jagirs prepared in that year shows that the investigating officer recommended that the muafi should be maintained for the benefit of the Prince and his progeny in perpetuity, but the Commissioner varied that recommendation by suggesting that it should be maintained only for the life of the Prince (Exhibit 6). The Government of India, however, by its letter No. 173, dated the 12th January 1861, sanctioned the grant in perpetuity so long as there were lineal heirs of the Prince in existence (Exhibit 5). On the 4th November 1861, a sanad was issued to the Prince (Exhibit B14), with a vernacular counterpart attached (Exhibit B25), couched in the following terms "It having been established after due enquiry that Mirza Muhammad Hamid Ali Khan held the under-mentioned villages in Zila Lucknow in rent-free tenure under the former Government, the Chief Commissioner under the authority of the Governor-General in Council is pleased to maintain the tenure in perpetuity so long as there are lineal heirs on the following conditions:—That he shall have surrendered all sanads, title-deeds, and other documents relating to the tenure in question to be delivered to the Government. That he and his heirs shall strictly perform all the duties of landlords, in matters of Police and any Military or Political service that may be required of them by the authorities and that they shall never fall under the just suspicion of favouring in any way the designs of enemies of the British Government. If any one of these conditions is broken by the present incumbent or his heirs, the tenure will be immediately resumed." The property granted was described as comprising villages Bhelawan measuring 687 acres, Ali Nagar 437 acres, Para 1312 acres, Nadauna 337 acres, Kanandi 687 acres, Sadrauna 312 acres and Harchandpur Kanaura of which the area was not mentioned. A summary Settlement of these villages had taken place prior to the grant, but the land-revenue assessed was not mentioned in the sanad. In the letter sent by the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, dated the 12th January 1861, to the Chief Commissioner of Oudh sanctioning the grant (Exhibit 5), the Government of India stated: "In cases where the King (and still more where his predecessors) had given jagirs to individual members of the royal family and had so launched them into the world with fortunes of their own, it would be harsh in the extreme to resume these fortunes, or even to interfere with the descent of such fortunes to legitimate or recognized heirs, and to make them all dependent upon the King's consideration and carefulness, he having long ago disencumbered himself of them", and then proceeded to say: "as regards grants in perpetuity which the Chief Commissioner has ascertained, were liable to resumption on the failure of direct heirs of the body of the grantee, and also on the holder incurring the King's displeasure, the President in Council observes that the Government of India is not competent to enter upon judgment of such acts (especially where Begams are concerned) as were likely to cause the King's displeasure, and this being so, the fair course is to recognise the perpetuity of the grants. The President in Council, therefore, sanctions the continuance in perpetuity of the 15 jagirs referred to in paragraph 6 of this letter, so long as there are lineal heirs by the King." It is admitted that jagir No. 30 now in dispute was included in the 15 jagirs above referred to. The revenues of jagirs Nos. 2

HUSAIN ALI MIRZA V. MUHAMMAD AZIM KHAN.

17, 18, 22, 29, 30 and 37 are stated in that letter to have amounted at the time to Rs. 33,279. But the reference to the revenue does not necessarily imply that the grant was in the nature of an assignment of land revenue as distinct from a grant of full proprietary rights. The Government had to refer to the revenue in its discussion with the local Government to indicate what it was losing by the grant, and the contention that the Government intended to assign the revenue but not the land is inconsistent with the terms of the grant, which describe the area of the villages without mentioning the revenue assessed, and assign to the grantee the duties of a landholder, and also with the admission, paragraph 2 of the plaint, that the British Government allowed to Prince Hamid Ali the jagirs and zemdari rights in Kanausi. The word "rent" was used loosely in those days for "revenue." The Government intended, it is manifest, not to disturb pre-existing rights and to allow the grantee to enjoy an independent means of subsistence. With the exception of the village Kanausi, of which the Prince was in khas possession or directly realized the rents, the villages granted were at the time of the grant in the possession of certain other persons from before the annexation. These persons obtained decrees for proprietary possession as against the Prince at the Regular Settlement (Exhibits 37, 43, 46, 52 and B41), but in regard to village Kanausi, it was found by the Settlement Officer that the claimants had lost their possession long before the date of the grant (Exhibit 51). The village was, therefore, settled with the Prince whose descendants have since then been in possession of the rights both of the British Government and of the original proprietors in it.

References to revenue-free tenures are found in several places in the Oudh Papers for 1856-58, where holders of rent-free tenures are described (page 266) as taking the place of the Government, leaving the rights of the actual possessors or old proprietors undisturbed, and in the Settlement Circular No. C/1123, dated the 16th April 1862, it was distinctly stated that the grant of rent-free tenure or jagir carried with it proprietary rights in the soil, the Government simply consenting to waive its claim to the payment of the land revenue on the holding in perpetuity or for the life or lives of one or more persons specified without in any way affecting the proprietary rights of others in the soil existing at the time of the grant. (Banerjee's Settlement Circulars, page 87.)

It is contended that the word "jagir" as used by the Government of India in the letter above referred to, did not intend to confer anything more than a succession of life-estates on the Prince and his lineal descendants. But whatever meaning the word "jagir" may have carried during native rule or in the Maharatta country, where, as observed in Ramchandra Mantri v. Venkatarao Mantri(1), jagirs were generally resumable at the death of the grantee, there can be no doubt as to the fact that the British Government in conferring jagirs or revenue-free tenures intended to confer a heritable and transferable estate on the grantee, subject to such terms and conditions as might be contained in the grant. Bengal Regulation XXXVII of 1793 enacted rules for determining the validity of titles of persons holding or claiming a right to hold altamgha, jagir and other land under Badshahi grants. By section 15 of the Regulation, it was provided: "Altamgha, ayna and madad mash grants are to be considered as hereditary tenures. These and other grants, which from the terms or nature of them may be hereditary and are declared valid by this Regulation or which have been or may be confirmed by the British Government or any of its officers possessing competent authority to confirm them, are declared transferable by gift, sale or otherwise." In regard to jagirs granted by the old Kings, section 15 declared that they were to be considered as life-tenures, expiring with the life of the grantee, unless otherwise expressed in the grant. The grant confirmed in this case, was not that of a life-tenure, but of a rent-free tenure in perpetuity to subsist as long as the grantee had lineal descendants in existence and the effect of the confirmation was to substitute the Prince for the Government in regard to such interest as the Government had in the soil, and to give him a heritable and transferable right.

Such a grant bears no analogy to an estate tail, for an estate tail is conferred on a certain person and the heirs general or specific of a particular body or bodies. This grant now in question was conferred on a particular individual by name and was declared to be heritable so long as the grantee had lineal descendants in existence. In other words, the duration of the grant was to last as long as the grantee had lineal descendants existing, and the grant was to lapse or to be resumed on the happening of any of the contingencies specified therein and on no other. The grant did not specifically forbid an assignment, and based as it was on a recognition of pre-existing rights or of the principle that if there was any property to which the Prince was fairly entitled, he should be allowed to enjoy it (vide paragraph 3 of the letter of the Government of India, Exhibit 5), all proprietary rights other than those restricted by the grant will be deemed to have passed with it.

A grant of villages, revenue-free, in consideration of the rights held by the grantee prior to the confiscation, does not amount to a pension within the meaning of Act XXIII of 1871, and as held in Ganpat Rao v. Ananda Rao () a grant by the British Government confirming a previous grant made by the preceding ruler of such rights as the Government possessed, is excluded from the purview of the Pensions Act. In Ravji Narayan Mandlik v. Dadaji Bapuji (3), Westropp, C. J., in dealing with the grant of a village in inam, including the waters, trees, stones, quarries, mines and hidden treasures, but excluding the hakdars and inamdars, observed:—"It is no doubt true that 'sanadi grants in inam, saranjam, etc., are, generally speaking, more properly described as alienations of the royal share in the produce of the land,' i. e., of land revenue, than grants of land, although in popular parlance so-called, but it is not true that such is invariably the case. If words are employed in the grant which expressly or by necessary implication indicate that Government intends that so far as it may have any ownership in the soil, that ownership shall pass to the grantee, neither Government, nor any person subsequently to the date of the grant deriving under Government, can be permitted to say that the ownership did not so pass."

In Amna Bibi v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi (4) where certain immoveable property was granted in lieu of a pension, and the sanad provided that upon the death of the original grantee the estate would be continued in perpetuity in the manner of an hereditary holding, and at the desire of the grantee, revenue was assessed and the members of the family treated it as an ordinary zamindari property subject simply to the payment of the Government revenue, Banerji and Tudball, J.J., held that the zamindari so granted was not a pension within the meaning of section 11 of the Pensions Act and was liable to attachment and sale in execution. The mere fact that a grant of property is made to provide the grantee with an independent means of subsistence does not make the property granted inalienable—Thakur Kopilnauth Sahi Deo v. Government (5) and Kumara Tirumalai Naik v. Bengaru Tirumalai Sauri Naik (6). A covenant declaring that the grant shall be liable to resumption on the failure of heirs to the original grantee, has similarly no such effect: Maharaj Kumar Jagat Mohan Nath v. Brinda Saha (7). In Krishnarav v. Rangare (8) a grant made to a person and his children in perpetuity, was held to be alienable, and in Dosibai v. Ishvardas Jagjivandas (9) and Ramlal Mookerjee v. Secretary of State for India in Council (10), it was held that alienability was not inconsistent with the fixation of a certain line of descent to determine the duration during which the grant was to last. Grants of land for past services or on condition of loyalty, have similarly been deemed alienable [Dosibai v. Ishwardas Jaggirandas (11); Lachmi Narain v. Mukund Singh (12) and Dost Muhammad Khan v. Bank of Upper India (13)].

Section 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) evidently makes a distinction between a pension and a grant of money or land revenue, for section 12 of the Act merely prohibits the assignment of pension, pay or allowance and is silent with regard to grants of money or land revenue to which a reference is made in section 4. It seems impossible, therefore, to avoid the conclusion that the word "pension" denotes something different from a grant of money or land revenue, and as observed in Panchanallayyan v. Nilkandayyan (14) and Manna Lal v. Fazal Imam (15), a grant of land revenue free does not come within the purview of the Pensions Act. [See also Secretary of State for India in Council v. Khemchand Jeuchand (16) and Subraya Mudali v. Velayuda Chetty (17).] The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants has referred to a number of Bombay decisions in which grants of inams or saraujams were held to convey mere estates for life, but as pointed out in Gulabdas Jaggirandas v. Collector of Surat (18) and Ramchandra Mantri v. Venkatarao Mantri (1), the decisions in Bombay were generally based on the usages of the Mahratta country, which have no application in this part of India. The nature of the rights conveyed to holders of jagirs in these Provinces is aptly illustrated by a decision in Bithu Bhut v. Lalla Raj Kishore (19) where a grant in perpetuity, generation after generation, was held to confer a heritable and transferable estate. Each grant has to be construed according to its own terms, and if there is nothing in a grant to indicate that a limited estate was conferred or that the rights conferred amounted to a pension within the meaning of Act XXIII of 1871, alienability attaches to the grant of proprietary rights or such rights as the grantor may have possessed subject to any conditions which the grant may impose. The decision of this Court in First Civil Appeal No. 92 of 1895 declaring that a mortgage made by Farkhunda Mahal, one of the mutai wives of the ex-King, could not be enforced after her death, is of no significance, because Farkhunda Mahal had no issue, and the grant to her, whether made in lieu of maintenance or otherwise, lapsed on her death.

* * * * *

It has been urged by the contesting defendants in connection with the plea of limitation that the award did not create a mortgage, and that the suit should have been filed within 12 years from the date when the right to possession accrued. An award is, however, in the eyes of law a substitution of the will of the arbitrator for the will of the parties. It amounts in fact to the subordination by the parties of their will to the will of another whom they nominate by mutual consent to interpose between them, and as observed by Russell (Russell on Arbitration, ninth Edition, page 333) an award is considered in equity as an act of parties validating the transaction, subject to certain qualifications, in the same manner as if the parties had entered into it themselves. The award was made before Act IV of 1882 came into force. Section 2 of the Act saves from its operation any right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before that Act came into force, and section 30 of the Specific Relief Act places awards for the purposes of specific performance on the same footing as any other contract. The award was made in pursuance of an agreement to which the ex-King, as the grandfather and guardian de facto of the descendants of Prince Hamid Ali, was a party and inasmuch as the property in dispute was conveyed to Mahdi Quli Khan as security for the money due to him or, in other words, to enable him to retain the possession and enjoyment of the usufruct thereof till his debt was satisfied, it created a relation analogous to that of a mortgagor and mortgagee and a suit for redemption is maintainable.

The award stated that the jagir shall remain in the possession of Mahdi Quli

Khan till the sum specified therein, was liquidated with interest at 6 per cent. per annum and that when the said debt was paid in full, the jagir shall be handed over by him to the person who may be determined at that time to be the surviving heir of the late Prince Hamid Ali according to the Muhammadan Law. The possession of Mahdi Quli Khan was that of a mortgagee entitling him to hold the property for a certain period in satisfaction of the amount due to him under the award and Article 145 of the Indian Limitation Act applies to the suit.

Assuming, however, that Article 144 of the Act is applicable to such a suit, there is nothing to show that the possession of Mahdi Quli Khan or his heirs or representatives ever became adverse to the plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-title * * *

* * * * *

It is urged by the learned Counsel who appears for the heirs of Shapper Mirza that the lease of the 6th January 1882 was not executed by Muhammad Mirza on behalf of the family and that the said ratification was not, therefore, of any legal value. But it is obvious from the terms of the lease that Muhammad Mirza was acting as the senior male member of the family in making the arrangement for the payment of the debts due by the estate which he and his brothers and sister had inherited from their father, and whether he was acting as an executor de son tort or as the self-constituted head of the family, his action was one which the other members of the family had a right either to impugn or to confirm, according as it was not for their benefit or otherwise. Section 196 of the Indian Contract Act lays down that where acts are done by one person on behalf of another, but without his knowledge or authority, he may elect to ratify or to disown such acts. If he ratify them, the same effects will follow as if they had been performed by his authority. Muhammad Mirza obviously did not purport to act in his own right, for in the very beginning of the leases, he described himself as the eldest son of Prince Hamid Ali, whose instructions, he wrote, he was carrying out in regard to the payment of his debts; and while recognising that his younger brothers and sister had also an interest in the property, he went on to say that those debts were binding on the heirs, and that neither he nor his co-sharers would have any right to cancel the leases till the said debts were paid. By the leases, he was transferring the entire jagir belonging to the family, and whether his act was authorized or not, he was in fact acting on behalf of the family and for the benefit of all its members in dealing with the property of the deceased and making arrangements for the payment of the debts which the deceased had left unpaid. The receipt of his share of the rent by Shapper Mirza subsequent to the execution of the lease of 1882 from the lessee also indicates that he had approved of the arrangement which Muhammad Mirza had made for the payment of the debts, and it is not open to the heirs of Shapper Mirza to raise an objection on his behalf to the validity of the lease which he had expressly confirmed and ratified by agreement and conduct during his life-time.

Qurratulain attained majority in October 1887, and similarly confirmed and approved of the leases granted by Muhammad Mirza by express assertion, conduct and receipt of rent from time to time during his life-time. On the 29th October 1887, he executed a deed of simple mortgage (Exhibit B7) in favour of Jafar Quli Khan, wherein he referred to the leases of the 10th May 1880, and the 6th January 1882, which his mother and guardian, Nawab Kaukab Mahal, had ratified and stated that he was bound by the same (Lihaza hamne apni walida sahiba ki jumla tahrirat wa rasidat o qabul wa mansur karlia hai aur maen hissalar 2/7th sharaet destawezat mazkura bala ka bil-ishtirak zimmedar a paband hunga). On the 1st September 1888, he executed another deed of simple mortgage (Exhibit B6) in favour of Jafar Quli Khan, wherein he similarly referred to the leases of the 10th May 1880 and the 6th January 1882 in terms of approval. The first of these deeds is attested by one man, named Altaf Husain, and is not enforceable as a mortgage. The proof of the attestation of the other does not satisfy the requirements of section 58 of Act IV of 1882 and section 69 of the Evidence Act, as interpreted in Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (20); but the signatures of Qurratulain on those documents are proved by reliable evidence, and there is nothing in law to prevent those documents from being admitted in evidence for a collateral purpose, namely, to prove the ratification of the leases of the 10th May 1880 and the 6th January 1882 by Qurratulain. A document which is not enforceable as a mortgage may, as pointed out in Ulfat-un-nissa alias Elahijan Bibi v. Hosain Khan (21), Tofaluddi Peada v. Mahar Ali Sha'a (22) and Pulaka Veetil Muthalakulan Gara Kunhu Meidu v. Thiruthipalli Madhava Menon (23), be used in evidence for a collateral purpose, unconnected with the mortgage. * * *

It is contended on behalf of the heirs of Qurratulain, who died on the 12th July 1902, that the lease granted by Muhammad Mirza was not granted by him as a guardian of Qurratulain and was consequently incapable of ratification. But the lease was granted with the assent and concurrence of Nawab Kaukab Mahal, the mother and guardian of the minor, and although as a rule, the dealings of a de facto guardian of a minor with the minor's property, do not bind the minor there might be cases of urgent and imperative necessity, as for instance the maintenance of the minor or the performance of funeral ceremonies or the discharge of other obligations binding on the minor, where a transaction entered into for the benefit of the minor, may be binding on him. In Mahomed Abdul Kadir v. Amtal Karim Banu (24), where a mother executed a sulehnama on behalf of her minor daughters, by which she transferred the shares of those daughters in their estate, and it was found that the transfer had been acted upon and followed by possession and the daughters had after attaining full age allowed a lengthened period of 20 years to elapse without taking proceedings to dispute it, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that if the mother had exceeded her powers in executing the sulehnama on their behalf, and if they might at one time have had it set aside, their long acquiescence was sufficient to show ratification of the transaction. The sulehnama was, therefore, upheld. Their Lordships did not decide in that case whether the mother had an authority to transfer the shares of her daughters and came to the conclusion that their making no objection for so many years after they had attained majority was sufficient evidence that they had ratified and adopted it. In Kali Dutt Jha v. Abdul Ali (25), where a sale of certain property belonging to a minor was effected by his father, who was his natural guardian, to settle some disputes then pending in regard to the property of the minor of which the portion sold formed a part and the sale was effected for a fair price, their Lordships of the Privy Council, in upholding the sale as having been effected for the benefit of the minor, observed:—"It is not a case of a sale by a guardian of immoveable property of his ward the title to which was not disputed, in which case a guardian is not at liberty to sell except under certain circumstances.—Macnaghten's Principles of Muhammadan Law, Chapter VIII, clause 14. The right of Udulunnisa and Fakirunnisa to be purchasers of the nine annas was disputed. By the sale of the two annas the dispute was put an end to, and thus a settlement obtained of the seven annas. Moreover, the Rs. 6,235 appeared to be a fair price for the two annas which had in December 1856 been sold by Safdar Hossein for Rs. 2,250." In Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad Ali (26), where a mortgage was made by an elder brother on behalf of himself and his minor brother to pay certain debts binding on the minor, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a person by de facto guardianship might assume important responsibilities in relation to the minor's property, but could not thereby clothe himself with the legal power to sell it and they declared the sale to be not binding on the minor, although made for the payment of an ancestral debt, as it was not made of necessity and was not beneficial to the minor. They, however, abstained from expressing an opinion as to whether according to the Muhammadan Law, a sale by a de facto guardian, if made of necessity or for the payment of an ancestral debt, affected the minor's property and if beneficial to the minor was altogether void or merely voidable. The question was considered at some length by Abdur Rahim and Ayling, J.J. in Thaulan Valappil Easuf v. Rotuseri Valappil Koya (27) and the conclusion to which the learned Judges there arrived, was that according to the general principles of the Muhammadan Law a sale of the minor's property by an unauthorized guardian, even if it was not made for a valid cause, that is, of necessity or under circumstances which would make the transaction purely advantageous to the minor, was, strictly speaking, neither void nor voidable in the ordinary sense of the term and that an alienation of the minor's property without any justifying cause, must be regarded as manquf or dependent, that is, its validity depended upon the minor accepting the transaction on attaining majority. "It is", said Abdur Rahim, J., "a transaction in a state of suspense, its validity or invalidity is only determined by the minor adopting or not adopting it after he has attained majority, though the effect of his decision will relate back to the date of inception of the transaction. If he accedes to adopt the transaction, it becomes valid from the inception; otherwise it will be treated as void and of no effect from the very commencement."

A lease is, moreover, in the nature of a continuing contract which a minor may adopt or repudiate on attaining majority by allowing or refusing to allow a lessee to continue in possession and accepting or refusing to accept the rent offered by him. In the case of a continuing obligation such as the engagement of a servant or the continuance of a tenancy, an absence of repudiation or the acceptance of service or rent with full knowledge of the facts, implies an undertaking to adhere to the obligation and operates as a ratification or renewal of the old contract by the party accepting the service or rent—(Trevelyan on Minors, page 235, and Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant, page 44).

(27) 15 Ind. Cas. 576; 37 M. 514; 12 M. L. T. 147; (1912) M. W. N. 889; 23 M. L. J. 244.

In addition to the express ratification above referred to, both Shapper Mirza and Qurratulain allowed the lessee to remain in possession with full knowledge of the facts and continued to receive their shares of the rent secured by the lease as long as they were alive. They are, therefore, estopped from questioning the validity of the lease. On the 7th March 1882, Shapper Mirza borrowed Rs. 500 from Jaffar Quli Khan on an agreement that the interest due on the said money shall be liable to deduction from his share of the rent secured by the lease of the 6th January 1882 and that if he did not pay the principal money within four years, the lessee would be entitled to withhold the payment of his entire share of the rent until the said loan was liquidated—(Exhibit B4). By the deed of further charge, dated the 1st September 1888 (Exhibit B5), Qurratulain similarly borrowed a sum of Rs. 2,900 from Jaffar Quli Khan and after referring to the leases of the 10th May 1880 and the 6th January 1882, executed by his elder brother, Muhammad Mirza, and ratified by his mother, Nawab Kankab Mahal, on his behalf by an agreement, dated the 26th January 1882, under which Jaffar Quli Khan was in possession of the villages in dispute to secure the "payment of ancestral debts" stated that he was jointly responsible for the liabilities created by the aforesaid deeds according to the conditions therein laid down and stipulated that if he did not pay the sum borrowed with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem within four years, the mortgagee shall have power to deduct the same from his share of the rent secured by the lease. Shapper Mirza and Qurratulain could not have succeeded in securing the loans of Rs. 500 and Rs. 2,900 but for the assurance given by them in their deeds and the stipulation contained therein that the mortgagee could recover the same in case of non-payment within certain periods from the rents payable to them under the lease aforesaid. The law enacted in section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act relating to estoppel as a consequence of declaration, act or omission causing another's belief, and action thereon, does not differ from the English Law on that subject, and as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (28), the main question in determining whether estoppel has been occasioned is, whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made, to act on the faith of it, the motive or the knowledge of the matter on the part of the person making the representation being of little consequence.

The possession of a person under an express assertion of a title, whether proprietary or otherwise, within the knowledge of the person who has a right to oust him, may, besides under certain circumstances, vest the person in possession with the title asserted, if his possession and the right asserted in relation thereto remain unchallenged for more than 12 years, that is, for the period provided by law [Parameswaram Mumbannoo v. Krishnan Tengal (29) and Thakore Fatesinghji v. Bamanji Ardeshir Dalal (30)]. The lessee in this case has been in possession of the property by an open assertion of his title under a lease of 1882. Shapper Mirza and Qurratulain have been accepting the rents with full knowledge of the circumstances under which the lease was granted, as shown by the bonds dated the 7th March 1882 and the 1st September 1888 (Exhibits B4 and B6) above referred to. The acceptance of such rent does not merely involve the creation of a tenancy-at-will, for a landlord, who accepts rent under those circumstances and omits to exercise his right of ejectment, cannot preserve his right to other claims continuously denied by the tenant. The plaintiffs-appellants derive their title from Shapper Mirza and Qurratulain, and it is not open to them now to question the leases which their predecessors-in-title accepted and the benefits of which they enjoyed till the end of their lives.

BHIWANI ORPHANAGE ASSOCIATION V. PARMA NAND.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit, which has given rise to this second appeal, was brought by the respondents Parma Nand and Kanshi Ram, the first cousins of one Badri, to contest a gift effected by his widow, Musammam Manbhari, in favour of an orphanage at Bhiwani. The deed of gift is dated the 1st of September 1911, and it is indisputable that under the Hindu Law, by which the parties are governed, the widow had no power to make the alienation in question. The cardinal point for decision is whether the plaintiffs had permitted her to give her husband's estate to any charitable object she pleased. The determination of this question depends upon the interpretation to be placed upon a document which was executed by her on the 4th January 1909 and attested by her husband's reversioners, including the plaintiffs in this suit.

Now, by this deed, the widow appoints Lala Chandu Lal as her agent for the purpose of selling the property and applying the sale-proceeds to the construction of a well and a dharmshala; and the first portion of the document recites the fact of the reversioners having given her general authority to devote the property to any charitable purpose. The relevant passage, the meaning of which is the subject of dispute between the parties, may be translated in the following terms:—

"My reversionary heirs, Parma Nand and Kanshi Ram, sons of Gauri Datt, and Shero Datt, son of Ballu Mal, mahajans of Hissar, consent to disposing of the above-mentioned property in charity (khairat men); and they have given me permission to dispose of it to charity or to apply it to charity, and are signing this instrument in the margin in token of consent. As I am a widow and cannot make proper arrangements for the application to charity, so I, being in my full senses, without any sort of compulsion and with the consent of my heirs, above mentioned, appoint Lala Chandu Lal, son of Lala Ram Sarn Das, mahajan, Agarwal, sahukar of Hissar, my agent and curator, and give him full power to dispose of the above-mentioned immoveable property in his charge by sale and to withdraw my money from the Bank and to make a well or dharmshala in the name of my deceased husband, Lala Badri Pershad, for the comfort of the people, in whatever village or town he may consider suitable. Neither I, nor my heirs, will raise any sort of objection, and I will approve of the above-mentioned Lala's arrangements, as if they were my own, but the said Lala is not at liberty to devote the property, to any charity other than a well or dharmshala."

We have given our careful consideration to the document as a whole in order to ascertain the intention of the executant and the reversioners and have reached the conclusion that the latter gave the widow full authority to apply the property to charity, and that it was she who selected the particular charity specified in the deed. The earlier portion of the document, which concerns the collaterals, mentions general consent in clear and unmistakable terms; and the fact that the widow, at that time, favoured one specific charitable purpose, cannot be a valid ground for putting a restricted meaning upon the general words. It appears that the plaintiffs took a prominent part in the preparation and execution of this deed and that it was presented to the Sub-Registrar by the plaintiff Parma Nand, and it was at his house that the registration took place. In these circumstances, it is manifest that if the plaintiffs had agreed to the donation of the property only to a particular charity, and to no other, they would have stated so in the deed and would not have expressed their intention by using the word "charity" without any qualifying expression.

It is significant that the restricted meaning sought to be placed upon the language of the instrument, was not referred to in the plaint; nor was it mentioned by the plaintiff Kanshi Ram in his evidence before the Court of first instance. And though that Court pronounced its decision against the plaintiffs, the contention, upon which the judgment of the learned Divisional Judge proceeds, did not find a place in the memorandum of appeal preferred by them to his Court.

It seems to us that the reversioners originally gave the widow authority to devote the property to any charity and that, when the execution of the mode of charity selected by her, became impracticable on account of the death of Lala Chandu Lal, they repented of their action and wanted to raise all sorts of objections to her power of disposal. A general intention to give to charity was agreed to by them and the failure of the particular mode, by which the charity was to be effected, would not destroy the charity. We consider that the gift to the orphanage is covered by the consent given by the respondents and that they are not entitled to impeach it. We accordingly accept the appeal, and reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, we dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell in a suit brought by the plaintiff on two promissory notes for Rs. 2,000 each, alleged to have been executed by the defendant. The defendant, who admittedly was a young boy just emerged from minority and was the undivided nephew of one Purushothama Sah who was possessed of considerable property, alleged in his written statement that there was no consideration for the notes, and he went on to set up a case that he had been decoyed into the company of a young girl and had been drugged and that he had been made to sign his name on blank papers when he had not sufficient control over his mind and was in a position to be dominated by the will of one Erappa Chetty, who introduced him to this woman. The learned Judge was not satisfied with the evidence produced by the defendant in support of this plea, but he thought the case was a sufficiently suspicious one to call upon the plaintiff to answer it; and the plaintiff produced evidence which the learned Judge describes, and we entirely agree with him, as mostly "palpably false". Finding, however, that the execution of the notes by the defendant was proved and that he had failed to prove that he merely signed blank papers, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the burden of proof which lay on the defendant had not been discharged, and, therefore, gave a decree for the plaintiff for the full amount sued for.

With great respect, while we entirely agree with the learned Judge's appreciation of the evidence, both for the defendant and for the plaintiff, we think that on the evidence as it stood as a whole at the close of the defendant's case, there was sufficient to throw the burden on to the plaintiff and that the plaintiff has not satisfied that burden. It was held in the case of Moti Gulabchand v. Mahomed Mehdi Tharia Topan (1), which was recently followed by this Court in Sundarammal alias Soebhagiammal v. Subramania Chettiar (2), that where the alleged executant of the note had just emerged from minority and had large expectations and no present command of money, very little was required to throw the burden on to the plaintiff. As the learned Judge has said, most of the plaintiff's story in this case is palpably false. His family are piecegoods merchants, and he says that the money he advanced to the defendant did not come from the piecegoods business, and that it was kept locked up in his box. He has not shown by satisfactory evidence that he was in possession of such a large sum as Rs. 4,000 and his own uncorroborated statements show that his money-lending business, if it existed at all, was exceedingly restricted. Then he has put into the box witnesses to prove, that these sums were borrowed by the defendant for the purpose of the business which was managed by his uncle, who carried on a large abkari business. The learned Judge has sufficiently shown how incredible it is that these large sums should have been lent to this boy without reference to the head of the family and without obtaining the promissory notes from him. We agree with the learned Judge that it is impossible in this state of the evidence to say what the exact truth is; but we think there is quite sufficient to throw the burden upon the plaintiff and that he has entirely failed to discharge it. We also think there is absolutely no doubt that he did not advance anything like Rs. 4,000 to this boy, though no doubt something was advanced on each occasion. We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the learned Judge and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. Neither of the parties is entitled to any consideration and we, therefore, make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed; Suit dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The genealogical tree is as follows:—

son, Wazir Singh, was adopted by Thamman Singh. Whether Lehna Singh was alive or not at the time of the adoption is a disputed point. After the adoption of Wazir Singh, Bishen Singh died sonless. Three years later, in 1908, Nand Singh died. The plaintiffs, viz., Gyan Singh and the sons of Hari Singh and Harnam Singh, sue for $\frac{1}{4}$ ths of his property, treating Wazir Singh and Lehna Singh as belonging to Thamman Singh's line by reason of Thamman Singh having adopted Wazir Singh.

Wazir Singh and Lehna Singh first put in joint pleas, but a separate guardian was then appointed for Lehna Singh and separate pleas were then put in.

The main plea for Wazir Singh was that he had not lost his right to succeed to his natural father's estate.

Lehna Singh relied mainly on a Will made by Nand Singh in his favour.

The first Court decreed the claim, holding that the parties were governed by custom, that Wazir Singh had lost his rights of succession by reason of adoption, that Lehna Singh was not adopted by Nand Singh and that Nand Singh could not make a Will in his favour.

Wazir Singh and Lehna Singh jointly appealed to the Divisional Judge, in whose Court a novel line of argument was taken up, viz., that Lehna Singh, having been in existence before his father's adoption, remained in his natural family, and so must succeed to his grandfather's estate to the exclusion of the plaintiffs. This argument, the Divisional Judge held to be correct, and so he dismissed the suit. The result is that neither defendant was able to appeal to this Court, although the decision of the lower Appellate Court is in favour of Lehna Singh alone, and not in favour of Wazir Singh.

The plaintiffs appeal to this Court, urging that the lower Appellate Court's decision is unsound, that the lower Appellate Court should not have allowed a new line of defence to be set up, that as a matter of fact, Lehna Singh was born after his father's adoption, and that the question of his being born before that adoption and of the effect of his being in existence at the time of the adoption should have been put in issue and the case remanded for further enquiry before any decision in defendants' favour was passed.

There is considerable force in these arguments, but for Lehna Singh, it is argued in this Court that, entirely apart from the fact of Lehna Singh's rights being unaffected by his father's adoption, the lower Appellate Court's order dismissing the suit is correct for the simple reason that Wazir Singh, though adopted, does not lose his rights of succession to his natural father's estate in the absence of other sons of that father.

This is, of course, an argument in favour of Wazir Singh's succession, but Lehna Singh is entitled to advance any argument which may enable him to prevent the plaintiffs from getting a decree.

The lower Courts have held that Wazir Singh's adoption bars his succession as son of Nand Singh. Their decision is based on a clause in the riwaj-i-am prepared in 1870, which lays down that when a man is adopted and subsequently his brothers die without issue, the adoptee succeeds to his natural father's estate only in the absence of brothers or nephews of his natural father.

The riwaj-i-am in question seems to have been prepared with great care for the banias of seventeen villages in the Muktsar Tahsil, and it is obviously a document entitled to considerable respect. Further, as is pointed out to us, it was attested by Nand Singh and Thamman Singh. It is also pointed out to us that Nand Singh himself thought that according to custom, the plaintiffs would succeed to his estate, his elder son having died sonless, and his younger son having been adopted, and so he wrote a Will in favour of Lehna Singh, in the course of which he mentioned Bishen Singh's death and Wazir Singh's adoption, and said "now I have no sons" (ab muzhir ki koi aulad sulbi nahin hai).

But in such cases what we have to see is, what is the real custom, not what the people think to be the custom. People have sometimes very strange and incorrect ideas of their own customs. If the custom alleged in the riwaj-i-am is correct, surely there should be some instances in support of it. This is not a case of a formal adoption under Hindu law; it is a case of appointment of an heir, and the ordinary custom is undoubtedly that laid down in paragraph No. 48 of Rattigan's Digest, viz., that the appointed heir retains his right to succeed in his natural family as against collaterals, though he does not succeed in presence of his natural brothers. It may well be that he would have to yield also to his brother's sons or even to his own son, assuming that that son was born before his own adoption or appointment (to use the proper term). But it seems clear that in the absence of all other lineal male descendants of the natural father, the adoptee succeeds to the exclusion of collaterals of that father; in other words, he is preferred to collaterals such as brothers and nephews of his natural father.

In the evidence, certain instances have been cited, but on examining them we find that every one of the five instances is in accord with the general custom, every one being a case of an adoptee being excluded by his own brothers. Not a single instance of an adoptee being excluded by collaterals of the natural father, is forthcoming. No doubt, it may be said that such instances must be rare. An only son is not adopted, and in the natural course of events, the father, being the older, survives the sons. But because instances are rare, we cannot guess at them. If they are very rare, then what becomes of the alleged custom? If such an instance only occurs once in a hundred years, are we to say that any custom exists? The fact remains that not a single instance in support of the alleged custom whereby an adoptee is excluded from succeeding to the estate of his natural father by the brothers or nephews of that father, is forthcoming, and we have to consider whether the bare statement to that effect in the riwaj-i-am is sufficient. Mr. Muhammad Shafi points out to us that the riwaj-i-am prepared by Mr. Francis at the later Settlement goes further and prevents the adoptee from succeeding to his natural father's estate entirely. That is to say, he has to yield not only to uncles and cousins but to all collaterals. We fail to see how this helps the case for the appellants. On the contrary, it shows that the banias in question have not always been consistent in their version of their own custom. At one Settlement, we find them so far conforming to usual custom as to admit the adopted son's right to succeed to his natural father's estate, failing other sons, brothers or nephews of that father; at a later Settlement we find them preferring all collaterals to the adoptee. Mr. Shafi speaks of this as a development of custom; we should rather regard it as a drifting back to personal law in the ideas of the people concerned.

Then Mr. Shafi argues that if no instance in point can be traced, the matter must be decided by personal law, but we fail to see how this helps him. For the personal law simply lays down that an adopted son loses rights of succession in his natural family, but this only refers to cases of formal adoption with due ceremonies as required by Hindu Law. Here, however, we are not dealing with such an adoption, but merely with a case of an appointment of an heir, and the Hindu Law is no bar to succession to the estate of the natural father in such a case. So if Wazir Singh is barred at all, he must be barred by custom. He is not barred by general custom which, as already stated, gives him the preference over all persons not directly descended from his natural father. And as to the alleged special custom, we hold the recital in the riwaj-i-am opposed to general custom and unsupported by instances, insufficient to prove its existence.

The result is that the plaintiffs' suit must fail. Whether Wazir Singh or Lehna Singh has the preferential right inter se, we do not decide. We find Wazir Singh has a better right to succeed than the plaintiffs, and if Lehna Singh has a better right than Wazir Singh, a fortiori he has a better right than the plaintiffs.

As regards costs, we note that Mr. Morton, appearing for Wazir Singh, urges that Wazir Singh's claim having been thrown out in the lower Appellate Court, his client is merely a pro forma respondent.

MUHAMMAD IDRIS V. MOTASADDI MIAN.

ent in this case, and in fact need not have been made a respondent at all. If this be so, we fail to see why Wazir Singh went to the expense of engaging Counsel to represent him in this Court. He appealed jointly with Lehna Singh to the lower Appellate Court, and we consider it was quite unnecessary for him to engage separate Counsel in this Court.

We uphold the decision of the Divisional Judge dismissing the suit, and dismiss this appeal.

The plaintiffs-appellants will pay Lehna Singh's costs in this Court. Wazir Singh will bear his own costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), s. 14—Sale for arrears of revenue—Suit for annulment—Sale for arrears of kist not due, ultra vires—Duty of Collector.

Where in a suit for the annulment of a sale for arrears of revenue, it appeared that the estate consisted of two manzas with revenue assessed proportionately on each payable by kists, and several accounts having been opened in respect of this estate, the June kist of one of the accounts fell in arrears and the Collector ordered the sale for the arrears of the March kist (none being found to be due for which):

Held, (1) that there being no arrears for the March kist, a sale held expressly for such arrears, was ultra vires, although the sale might legitimately have been held for the June kist and consequently the sale of the entire mahal under section 14 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act was void: [p. 745, col. 2.]

(2) that it was the duty of the Collector to close all the separate accounts before ordering sale of the entire estate. [p. 745, col. 1.]

Babu Umakali Mookerjee and Mr. Muhammad Mustafa Khan, for the Appellants.

Syed Shamsul Huq and Babu Chandra Sekhar Prasad Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the annulment of a sale for arrears of revenue which took place on the 19th of September 1904. The main grounds upon which the plaintiffs come to Court, are two. First, that the Collector had no jurisdiction to hold the sale as no arrears were legally due and second, that the sale was brought about by the fraud of defendant No. 3, who was the accredited agent of some of the plaintiffs for the payment of revenue and being as such bound to give information of the estate having fallen into arrears, did not do so, but on the contrary, colluded with defendants Nos. 1 and 2 whose servant also he was and purchased the estate for himself, his relation defendant No. 4 and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, entitling the plaintiffs to a reconveyance of their shares on payment of the proportionate value.

The learned Subordinate Judge has decided the suit against the plaintiffs on both these points and they have appealed mainly on the grounds indicated above.

The main facts of the case are that the estate called Mahal Fakruddinpur bearing tanzi number 1146 of the Saran Collectorate and consisting of the two Manzas Pakri Fatehulla and Fakruddinpur bore a Government revenue of Rs. 186-14-2½. The manzawar register kept by the Collector under section 4 of the Land Registration Act, Exhibit 19, page 117, shows that the revenue assessed upon Manzah Pakri Fatehulla was Rs. 79-2-5½ and that upon Fakruddinpur Rs. 107-11-8½. The learned Subordinate Judge says: "This so-called mahalwar register which bears the signature of the Superintendent of Survey, is not binding on the Collector, as the jama sular of 2 villages cannot be apportioned except under the Balwara Law." This seems to be a misconception of the Subordinate Judge. The keeping of these manzawar registers, called mahalwar registers in Behar is enjoined by section 4 of the Land Registration Act, VII of 1876, B. C. and even before that enactment, there were the quinquennial registers under Regulation XLVIII of 1793 and estate registers under

MUHAMMAD IDRIS v. MOTASADDI MIAN.

Regulation VIII of 1800. The attested copy filed, was taken from the Collectorate and the mere fact that it bears the signature of the Superintendent of Survey on a corner, does not make it a document kept by that officer. This document does not show any apportionment of revenue within a mouzah but states the revenue assessed on each mouzah, so that the reference to the Butwara Law is quite irrelevant. Now several separate accounts were opened in respect of this estate, four in respect of Mouzah Pakri Fatehulla comprising the whole 16 annas and 2 in respect of Fakruddinpur comprising 6 annas, leaving 10 annas as the ijmali or residuary share bearing the original touzi number 1146: the separate account shares being numbered as 1146/1, 1146/2, 1146/3, 1146/4, 1146/5, 1146/6, the first four relating to Pakri Fatehulla and the rest to Fakruddinpur. The first separate account 1146/1 was in respect of 9 annas 4 pies of Pakri for a revenue of Rs. 46-3-1, which is exactly proportionate to the basis of the revenue for the 16 annas being Rs. 79-14-5½. The second separate account 1146/2 was opened in 1872 in respect of a 2-annas share of Pakri Fatehulla and the revenue fixed was Rs. 10-11-6. The third account 1146/3 was opened in 1882 for 4 annas 8 pies for a revenue of Rs. 22-4-3, the 16 annas, making a total of Rs. 79-2-10, a little more than the actual amount of Rs. 79-2-5½, small fractions being taken as units for the convenience of realization and payment. In 1884, account No. 4 bearing T U 1146/4 was opened out of account No. 2 for 6 pies 13 krants and odd and the revenue assessed was Rs. 2-11-11. Account No. 5 was opened in 1892 for 2 annas of Fakruddinpur with a revenue of Rs. 13-7-6 and another of 4 annas of Fakruddinpur with a revenue of Rs. 26-15-0, both amounts being in exact proportion to a revenue of Rs. 107-1-8¼ for 16 annas. Thus 10 annas of Fakruddinpur was left as the residuary share and its revenue should be Rs. 107-11-8¼ minus Rs. 40-6-6, the total of the jamas for Nos. 5 and 6, that is, Rs. 67-5-2¼. It would appear that when account No. 4 was opened out of account No. 2, the original revenue for the original No. 2 was not reduced but left as before and the jama of the ijmali share was reduced by Rs. 2-11-11 which was assigned to account No. 4. In this way from June 1884 to March 1904 for a period of 19¾ years, the jama of account No. 2 was from year to year kept up on the erroneous basis of Rs. 10-11-6, i. e., Rs. 2-11-11 more than it should have been and the result was that account No. 2 was erroneously charged with Rs. 2-11-11 multiplied by 19¾ = Rs. 54-3-5 in excess. The arrear shewn on the March kist of 1904 is Rs. 52-4-4 and if the accounts of the Collector had been correctly kept, the account No. 2 would not only have been not in arrears in March 1904 but have had an excess payment of Rs. 1-15-1 to its credit. It is contended that even the figure of Rs. 10-11-6 is not correct and it should have been Rs. 9-14-4. Upon this amount being taken as the correct jama for the original No. 2, the excess payment would be much more on the 28th of March 1904, so that on either calculation, there was no arrear due from account No. 2 on the 28th of March 1904, and the proceedings for the sale of account No. 2 for the March kist of 1904 are entirely void, and consequently the sale of the entire mahal under section 14 is also void. See Balkishen Das v. Simpson (1). The learned Subordinate Judge says that "If the plaintiff's Pleader had shown by means of chalans that the owners of khata No. 2 have all along paid their share of Rs. 8 rent since the opening of the khata No. 4 and that the arrear is due to their not paying Rs. 2 odd, then that would have shown to some extent the reason of his contention. Here also the learned Judge is under a clear misconception. For as soon as we have it that since 1884, khata No. 2 has been charged with Rs. 10-11-6 and that on the March 29th of 1904, the arrear due on that basis was Rs. 52-4-4, the natural conclusion must be that the owners have paid the balance. There is another view of the case also in which the sale can be held to be ultra vires. Taking it for granted that the Collector's books were all correctly kept and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to rely upon the legally payable proportion of revenue for account No. 2, the arrear upon the 29th

(1) 25 C. 833; 25 I. A. 151; 2 C. W. N. 513.

MUHAMMAD IDRIS V. MOTASADDI MIAN.

of March 1904 was Rs. 52-4-4 for account No. 2.

Account No. 2 was put up for sale for that amount on the 6th June 1904 and the bills not reaching the said amount of arrear, the Collector declared that the whole mahal would be sold if the co-sharers did not make a purchase under section 14 within 10 days, i. e., up to the 17th June 1904. Now the June kist fell due on the 7th June 1904 and the owners made payments for that kist. When the co-sharers did not take advantage of the offer of the Collector under section 14 up to the 17th June, he had to sell the whole estate for such arrears as would be due upon the whole estate at that time. What he did, however, was that he closed the accounts up to 29th March 1904 and taking into account all excess payments made by other co-sharers up to March 29th found an arrear of Rs. 3 odd upon the whole estate as due for the March kist 1904 and sold the whole estate on the 19th September 1904 for this arrear of Rs. 3 odd as due up to the 29th March 1904. It is admitted that upon the basis of the Collector's books this would be the arrear up to the 29th March and Rs. 2-0-6 the arrear up to the June kist upon the whole estate, and the respondent contends that as there were arrears on the March kist as well as on the June kist, the mahal was liable to sale and the question of ultra vires goes out and the appellants cannot succeed on the errors and irregularities pleaded, as they were not specifically pleaded in the appeal before the Commissioner. It is admitted that the Collector was bound to close all the separate accounts before he could sell the entire estate under section 14. The Collector became entitled to sell the whole estate on the 17th June 1904. On that date, all the separate accounts must be considered as merged in one account for the whole estate, and if on that date all demands up to that date and all payments up to that date including the June kist were taken one against the other, there would be no arrear on the March kist but there would be an arrear of Rs. 2-0-6 for the June kist. There being no arrear for the March kist, a sale held expressly for such an arrear would be ultra vires although the sale might legitimately have been held for the June kist, which it was not. Therefore, on either view of the case, i. e., whether we take the Collector's books as incorrect and base our calculation on the correct revenue assignable to the several accounts, or whether we take the Collector's books as correct and consider how the Collector should have closed the separate accounts, there was no arrear for the March kist of 1904 and the sale must be held to be ultra vires and void. Having held that the sale was void on the first branch of the case, it is not necessary to go into the question of fraud and reconveyance. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that defendant No. 3 was the servant of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and that he was the agent of some of the plaintiffs for the payment of revenue, but that the treachery to the maliks of Fakraddinpur could not be of any avail to plaintiffs Nos. 1-9, who are maliks of Pakri Fatehulla with which defendant No. 3 had no concern. That is not, however, the right view to take of the case. If Wakif Hussen was the agent of some of the plaintiffs and the servant or agent of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and also interested as a co sharer in the right of his father and uncle in one of the mouzas comprising the estate, and if he brought about the sale in breach of his duty to the Pakri maliks whose agent he was and if the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 took advantage of his treachery, no Court of Justice would be inclined to allow defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to retain the benefit of the sale. As we have said, however, we do not think it necessary to go into these questions as our decision on the first branch of the case is quite sufficient to dispose of the appeal. The result, therefore, is that the appeal is decreed with costs of both the Courts. The sale is declared inoperative. The plaintiffs will recover possession of their shares with mesne profits, the amount of which will be ascertained in execution. The purchaser defendants will be entitled to a refund of the purchase-money with interest at the legal rate.

Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 150—Money due from him to the Company; Interpretation of Winding-up—Contributory—Debt due on pro-note to Company—Summary Jurisdiction of Court—Marginal notes to sections, reference to—Interpretation of Statute.

A debt due on a pro-note by a contributory is "money due from him to the Company" within the purview of section 150 of the Companies Act (VI of 1882). [p. 746, col. 2.]

Under section 150 of the Companies Act, the Court has, upon a summary application presented to it, the power to direct the contributory to pay not only all moneys due from him as a member, but also any debt due from him to the Company. The jurisdiction is permissive, but when a case is made out for the exercise thereof, it should not be declined unless very cogent reasons to the contrary are shown. [p. 747, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Additional Judge, Lahore, dated the 19th February 1915.

Mr. Sundar Das, for the Appellant.

Messrs B. Revan Pe'man and Gullu Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are very simple and do not admit of any dispute. The respondent, Lala Kidar Nath, has been settled on the list of the contributories of the Lahore Bank, Limited, which is being wound up subject to the supervision of the Court, and he owes a sum of money to the Bank on a pro-note executed by him. The main question for decision is whether the Court in a winding-up proceeding is empowered to call upon him to pay the debt to the Liquidator. The answer to this question depends upon the interpretation to be placed upon section 150 of the Indian Companies Act, VI of 1882, which runs as follows:—"The Court may, at any time after making an order for winding up the Company, make an order on any contributory for the time being settled on the list of contributories directing payment to be made, in manner in the said order mentioned, of any moneys due from him, or from the estate of the person whom he represents to the Company, exclusive of any moneys which he, or the estate of the person whom he represents, may be liable to contribute by virtue of any call made or to be made by the Court in pursuance of this part of this Act." Now, the language of the Statute is very comprehensive, and it appears to us that a debt due on a pro-note by a contributory is "money due from him to the Company" within the purview of the aforesaid section.

The learned Counsel for the respondent contends that the law is intended to apply only to such moneys as are due by a contributory in his capacity as a member, and not to debts due in his private capacity. To sustain this contention we would have to read into the section after the word "due" some words to the following effect: "as contributory," and we do not see any reason for making this addition. Indeed, there is no canon of the interpretation of Statutes which would justify us in adopting this course.

The learned Counsel on both sides are unable to cite any case, in which the matter in controversy in this appeal was raised and adjudicated upon. The judgment in Kamta Pershad v. Industrial Bank of India, Limited (1) delivered by a member of this Bench determines the question against the respondent, and the only other case having a bearing on the subject, we have been able to discover, is that of Mercantile Trading Company, In re, Stringer's case (2). That case related to the Court's power to order a contributory to repay a dividend declared and paid under a fraudulent balance-sheet and the decision on the point rested upon the interpretation of section 101 of the English Companies Act of 1862, which section, it is to be noticed, is in totidem verbis as the aforesaid section 150 of the Indian Act. The Vice-Chancellor Malins, before whom the case came up in the first instance, was of opinion that the liability to refund a dividend paid under a delusive and fraudulent balance-sheet could not be regarded as money due from a contributory to the Company within the meaning of section 101, and his judgment on this point was set aside by the Court of Appeal which came to the conclusion that the section conferred upon the Court the jurisdiction to grant a summary application for the return of the dividend so paid. Now, we find that, despite the fact that the Vice-Chancellor was not prepared to go so far as to bring the aforesaid claim within the terms of the section, he made the following observations with reference to the meaning and the object of the law:—"Now this appears to me to be directed to the case of debtors to the Company in the ordinary sense of the word. If you go through the ledger, you find A, B, C, and D, and so forth, indebted to the Company; the account being settled, the object of this section is to enable the Court to make a summary order upon the debtors of the Company, in the ordinary sense of the word, to pay that debt." These remarks of the learned Judge make it clear that the present claim of the Liquidator against the respondent is within the strict letter of the law and that the Court can exercise its summary jurisdiction to enforce the recovery thereof.

It is to be observed that the marginal note, both in the Indian and the English Acts, is in the following terms: "Power of Court to order payment of debts by a contributory", and the same expression is repeated in the Companies Consolidation Act of 1908 and the Indian Companies Act, 1913 (vide section 165 and section 186 respectively). The word "debts" is significant, and though the marginal note cannot be relied upon in clearing up the ambiguity in the text of the written law, it may with advantage be referred to when it confirms the conclusion warranted by the language of the section.

We are fortified in the result we arrive at by the consideration that the Legislature in enacting the section intended, as pointed out in Ramta Pershad v. Industrial Bank of India, Limited (1), to provide a cheap and expeditious method of getting at the assets of the Company and that the object aimed at would be defeated, if the Liquidator were required to bring a regular action on payment of an ad valorem Court-fee and subjected to the usual delay consequent upon an appeal in a suit. To quote the words of the Court of Appeal in Stringer's case (2), the law was enacted in order that by means of proceedings under the Act "without any double process or double set of proceedings, complete justice might be done between the parties, and a complete winding up effected". One of the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal in explaining the principle of the section further observes that there may be some very rare instances "where it may be necessary to have the facts stated upon the records, but wherever upon notice of motion, and upon affidavit and due examination of witnesses, you can properly arrive at a conclusion, I can see no reason whatever why a bill should be filed. It only adds to the expense,—upon notice of motion, and affidavits, and examination of witnesses complete justice can be done—the evidence can be taken under the winding-up just in as many ways as it can be taken upon bill filed; and, what is more important, there are the same means of hearing in the Court below, and the same means of appeal to this Court and to the House of Lords. Therefore, I can see no reason why any narrow construction should be put upon the Act, and I think it would be to the disadvantage of the public that a narrow construction should be put upon it". The above quotation sets out very clearly the justification of the rule which finds expression in section 150 of the Indian Act. The party proceeded against has really no reasonable cause for complaint, because in the summary proceeding, every objection is just as open to the person sought to be charged as it would have been if a suit had been instituted.

Upon a careful examination of the very wide and general terms in which the section is expressed, we are of opinion that the Court has, upon a summary application presented to it, the power to direct the contributory to pay not only all moneys due from him as a member, but also any debt due from him to the Company. The jurisdiction under the Act is no doubt permissive, but when a case is made out for the exercise thereof, it should not be declined unless very cogent reasons to the contrary are shown. There are cases in which the Court has refused to proceed summarily, when all the parties concerned were not amenable to the jurisdiction of winding-up, and the Court did not consider it right and just to have a piecemeal litigation, but in the case before us, the debt is admitted by the respondent, and the circumstance that the pro-note in question was signed by another person as a surety, who is not before the Court and is not subject to the summary jurisdiction, cannot be regarded as an adequate reason for refusing to exercise the statutory power against a person who is amenable to its jurisdiction.

For the foregoing reasons, we accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the Additional Judge, we direct him to proceed against the respondent under section 150 in accordance with law. The respondent must pay the costs incurred by the appellant in this Court.

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 2, 14, 22—Oudh Estates (Amendment) Act (III of 1910), s. 3—'Primogeniture', meaning of—Res judicata—Talukdar—Heir or legatee of Talukdar—"Would have succeeded," meaning of—Sanad, nature of estate created by—"Successors", meaning of—"Nearest male heir," interpretation of.

The Maniarpur Estate was held, at the time of annexation of Oudh, by one Sughra Bibi a Bachgoti Khanzada of Shia faith. The Summary Settlement was made with her and a sanad in the ordinary primogeniture form was subsequently granted to her. She died on the 11th November 1865, but her name was entered in the first and second lists framed under section 8 of Act I of 1869. She executed a Will on the 20th June 1862 bequeathing her whole estate to her youngest half-brother Akbar Ali Khan, who succeeded to the estate on her death. At the date of the execution of the Will and at the date of her death, her eldest half-brother Jafar Ali Khan was alive. Akbar Ali Khan transferred on the 23rd July 1869, by a hiba-bil-ewaz 39 villages to his wife Ilahi Khanam. On 29th June 1871, 16 days before his death, Akbar Ali made a Will by which he bequeathed the remaining 43 villages in the estate to Ilahi Khanam. At the time of Akbar Ali Khan's death on the 15th July 1871, his nephew Ghulam Husain Khan, son of his second brother Hasan Ali Khan, was alive. Ilahi Khanam died intestate on 20th April 1899 leaving six daughters Ummatul Fatima, Bibi Batul, Kaniz, Asghari, Ruqaiya and Haidari, who took joint possession of the estate on the death of their mother. After the death of Ilahi Khanam, the question of succession was brought before the Courts on several occasions.

Two suits were now brought, one by Ghulam Abbas son of Bibi Batul and the other by Mohammad Jafar son of Ummatul Fatima, both claiming possession of the Taluqa under the rule of primogeniture, asserting that succession to the estate was governed by the terms of the sanad. It was found that Ghulam Abbas was born before Mohammad Jafar.

Held (per Stuart, A. J. C.), that litigations which took place subsequent to the death of Ilahi Khanam to which her daughters were parties, could not operate as res judicata in the present suit as the daughter's sons were not parties to them. [p. 754, col. 2.]

That Ilahi Khanam was neither a talukdar nor an heir or legatee of a talukdar and that succession at her death was not governed by the provisions of section 22 of Act I of 1869. [p. 755, col. 1.]

That the amendment made by the Oudh Estates (Amendment) Act, III of 1910, in the definition of legatee, as given in section 2 of Act I of 1869, could not be given retrospective effect in the present case as it would have the effect of divesting persons who would otherwise be entitled at least to a portion of the estate. [p. 755, col. 2; p. 756, col. 1.]

That the words "would have succeeded" as used in section 14 of Act I of 1869 were not equivalent to "might have succeeded," and must be confined to persons in the special line of succession that would have been applicable to the particular case if the transferor or testator had died intestate and the death had occurred at the date of the transfer or in the case of a gift by Will, at the time when the succession opened. [p. 757, col. 1.]

That a transfer to a person coming under any of the clauses of section 22 did not bring the transfer within the provisions of section 14, if that person would be excluded by a senior member in his own class, and that the grouping in the clauses of section 22 could not be held to bind the rule of succession therein. [p. 758, col. 2; p. 759, col. 1.]

That therefore at the time of Sughra Bibi's death her eldest brother and the son of her second brother having been alive, the bequest made by her to her fourth brother Abbas Ali Khan had the effect of breaking the prescribed line of succession and so the provisions of section 14 could not be applied. [p. 759 col. 2.]

GHULAM ABBAS KHAN v. BIBI UMMATUL-FATIMA.

That explanation to section 3 of the Oudh Estates (Amendment) Act III of 1910, referred only to succession to the estates of a talukdar and, therefore, could not apply to Ilahi Khanam. [p. 760, col. 1.]

That the rule of primogeniture laid down in the sanads granted by Lord Canning meant the rule of lineal primogeniture as known to English Law. [p. 762, col. 2.]

That the estate created by the aforesaid sanad was not an estate known to English Law and that, to a certain extent, it resembled an estate in fee simple but was differentiated from it by the fact that under its terms, no female could succeed and that it bore some resemblance to an estate in tail male, but was differentiated from that by the fact that a collateral could succeed under the sanad whereas no collateral could succeed to an estate in tail male. [p. 763, cols. 1 & 2.]

That the word "successors" as used in the sanad meant "successors on death" and included both heirs and devisees but not transferees during life-time. [p. 764, col. 2.]

That the words "nearest male heir" could not be interpreted as meaning "nearest male heir according to the personal law of the grantee." [p. 767, col. 1.]

That the meaning of the sanad with regard to succession might be summarized as follows:—In the event of intestacy the case of all relatives of legitimate descent would be considered, all females and those claiming through females would be excluded and the succession would go to the surviving representatives of the highest line, however, collaterals only being admitted in the absence of the survival of descendants. [p. 769, col. 2.]

That, therefore, although succession to the estate was regulated under the terms of the sanad, neither of the plaintiffs-appellants, as daughter's sons, had any title under its terms. [p. 770, col. 1.]

Held, (per Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.), that the word "successors" as used in the sanad denoted successive heirs or persons succeeding to the intestate or undisposed of residue rather than persons in whose favour a transfer or bequest might be made by the owner in his life-time. [p. 775, col. 1.]

That in the hands of Akbar Ali Khan and Bibi Ilahi Khanam the estate was governed by the Muhammadan Law and the plaintiffs as sons of the daughters were not entitled to the estate in preference to the daughters. [p. 780, col. 2.]

That exclusion of daughters by the sanad did not mean exclusion of the daughters' sons and that the disability attached to the sex and not to the line. [p. 781, col. 1.]

That among sons by different daughters the preference was to be determined by seniority of the line and the age of persons representing the senior line, but no question of age arose where the persons claiming were not of the same line. [p. 781, col. 1.]

First Civil appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mohanlalganji, Lucknow dated 29th April 1913.

The Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru and Babus Ram Chandra and Ram Bharose Lal, for the Appellants, Messrs. Jagmohan Nath Chak, G. H. Thomas, Wazir Hasan, J. K. Banerji and Bepin Chander Chatterji, for the Respondents Nos. 3 to 6.

JUDGMENT.

STUART, A. J. C.—The facts of the case out of which these two appeals have arisen, are as follows:—

The Maniarpur Estate, which is situated in the districts of Sultanpur and Fyzabad, was held at the time of the annexation of Oudh, by a lady of the name of Sughra a Bachgoti Khanzada, a member of a family of Rajputs, who had previously become Muhammadans. The family were Shias. The Summary Settlement was made with Bibi Sughra, and a sanad in the ordinary primogeniture form was subsequently granted to her. She died on the 11th November 1865, but her name was entered in the lists framed under section 8, Act I 1869 in the first list as a person to be considered as talukdar, and in the second list, as one whose estate, according to the custom of the family, ordinarily devolved upon a single heir. This is not the only instance in which the name of a person who had died before the date of preparation, was inserted in the lists. Another well known case was that of Thakur Gajraj Singh of Mahewa [see Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (1)].

Musammat Sughra executed a Will on the 29th June 1862, bequeathing her whole estate to her youngest half-brother Akbar Ali Khan. The lady was the daughter of Basawan Khan by his first wife. Basawan Khan had four sons by his second wife—Jafar Ali Khan, Hasan Ali Khan, Baqar Ali Khan and Akbar Ali Khan. It was to the youngest of these four brothers that Sughra bequeathed her estate.

At the date of the execution of the Will and at the date of Bibi Sughra's death, Jafar Ali Khan was alive. It is to be noted that the Will of 29th June 1862, was made some years before the passing of Act I of 1869, and that, according to the definition of "legatee" in section 2 of Act I of 1869, Akbar Ali Khan was not a legatee within the meaning of that Act. Their Lordships of the Privy Council considered the meaning of the word "legatee" in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rao Jagatpal Singh (2). In view of the fact that Jafar Ali Khan was alive at the time of Bibi Saghra's death, Akbar Ali Khan was not "heir" to the property within the meaning of section 2 of the Act and the terms of the sanad, and the bequest was a transfer by Will to a person who was not the heir. Akbar Ali Khan succeeded to the possession of the taluka on the 11th November 1865. He was not a "Talukdar" as his name was not entered in the lists. He was not an "heir" of a talukdar or a "legatee" of a talukdar within the meaning of the Act subsequently passed. Akbar Ali Khan transferred on the 23rd July 1869 by a hiba-bil-ewaz, ostensibly in satisfaction of the amount due for dower debt, 39 villages to his wife Ilahi Khanam. That transfer took effect at once, the lady being placed in possession of all the 39 villages. By an alteration of physical boundaries, the 39 units have since been reduced to 31, but the area transferred has remained the same. On the 29th June 1871, 16 days before his death, Akbar Ali Khan made a Will, by which he bequeathed the remaining 43 villages in the estate to Ilahi Khanam. At the time of Akbar Ali Khan's death, which occurred on the 15th July 1871, his nephew Ghulam Husain Khan, son of his second brother Hasan Ali Khan, was alive. Ilahi Khanam died intestate on the 20th April 1899 leaving issue, six daughters, Bibi Ummatul Fatima, Bibi Batul, Bibi Kaniz, Bibi Asghari, Bibi Ruqia and Bibi Haidri. These ladies took joint possession of the estate on the death of their mother. At first, the name of Ummatul Fatima was alone recorded in the Revenue papers, but by a subsequent order, the names of all the six ladies were recorded jointly.

So far succession had devolved without adjudication on the part of the Civil Courts. But after the death of Ilahi Khanam, the question of succession was brought before the Courts on several occasions. The first person to dispute the title of the ladies, was Ghulam Husain Khan, the nephew of Akbar Ali Khan, of whom mention has already been made. He filed suit No. 42 of 1900 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur against the six ladies for the possession of the taluka. He based his claim on an alleged custom applying provisions of the Hindu Law, alleging that the family who had originally been Hindus were governed by a custom originating in the doctrines of the Hindu Law with regard to succession and that this custom continued effective after they had become Muhammadans. His suit was dismissed on the ground that he failed to prove that succession in the family was governed by the provisions of the Hindu Law, or that a custom existed excluding daughters from succession. He filed no appeal, and this dismissal became final against him from its date, the 18th June 1903. The six ladies were defendants in that suit, but their sons were not parties to it.

The second suit was filed by another Akbar Ali Khan, the brother of Ilahi Khanam, against the six ladies for possession of the taluka. This Akbar Ali Khan based his claim on the following allegations. He asserted that Akbar Ali Khan, the husband of Ilahi Khanam, was a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of Act I of 1869 to the estate, if Saghra had died intestate, and that in those circumstances, succession to the property was governed by the provisions of section 14, Act I of 1869. Reading those provisions with the provisions of section 22, clause 6, of the same Act, he claimed to succeed under the provisions of section 22, clause 6, basing his title to a certain extent upon the interpretation at which the Court of the Judicial Commissioner had arrived in the case of Rae Jagatpal Singh v. Thakurain Balrai Kuar (3), on the 6th March 1900. But before his case was decided, their Lordships of the Privy Council reversed the Judicial Commissioner's decision in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Singh (2) and the Counsel for Akbar Ali Khan, understanding the decisions of their Lordships to mean that the words "a person who would have succeeded, according to the provisions of the Act, to the estate if the testator had died intestate" denoted the heir-apparent rather than any possible heir, gave up the position that succession to the property was governed by the provisions of section 14 of Act I of 1869. In the decision of the case of Akbar Ali Khan, the Judicial Commissioner's Court arrived at the finding that section 14 did not govern succession to the estate but that section 15 had operation, that the estate was taken out of the operation of the Act owing to the fact that Sughra had bequeathed the estate to a person who was not her heir-apparent, that succession was governed by the Muhammadan Law, and that Akbar Ali Khan's case must fail accordingly. It is to be noted that Akbar Ali Khan's case was based entirely upon the allegation that succession must be governed by the provisions of sections 14 and 22, Act I of 1869, and that at first, he asserted no title by virtue of the rule of succession laid down in the sanad. The decision in question is reported as Musammatt Ummatul Fatima v. Asgar Ali Khan (4). At page 50, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner refers to a belated argument put forward by the Counsel for the plaintiff. The words are: "This view" (that is, the view that upon the construction of section 14 of Act I of 1869 accepted by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, the Act does not apply to the Maniarpur Estate) "is accepted by the learned Advocate for the plaintiff. But he contends that though his case under the Act fails, yet he is entitled to succeed apart from the Act upon the terms of the sanad which is on the record and which provides that the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture."

The learned Judges proceeded to find that the case so set up, was an absolutely new case, that it was not the case put forward in the lower Court, and that they would not be justified in awarding the plaintiff any relief upon a plea based on the terms of the sanad. They did not stop there, but proceeded to discuss briefly whether, even if such a plea was admissible, the plaintiff could succeed thereon. They held that he could not. They decided that the words "rule of primogeniture" referred to in the sanad, meant the custom of gaddi-nashini or descent to a single heir which prevailed in some thirty families in Oudh, and held that there were no materials upon which they could decide what particular custom of gaddi-nashini prevailed in the Maniarpur Estate. They decided that they had no reason to suppose that such custom of gaddi-nashini as prevailed in the Maniarpur Estate would give a brother preference to a daughter's son, and in effect arrived at the conclusion that, even if the plea had been admitted, they would not have found it established. But the Court, nevertheless, dismissed the appeal on the clear point that the plea could not be admitted. Wells, A. J. C., remarks at page 54: "Finding, however, that the suit must fail on the ground that Act I of 1869 cannot be applied, that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed now to set up a case on the sanad and that if this be permitted, he has not established a clear title to succeed under it, I would decree the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs," and Scott, J. C., says, "I agree with my learned colleague that the plaintiffs cannot be permitted to set up an entirely new case in appeal." It may thus be taken, that the effect of the sanad on succession to the property was not effectively considered. It cannot be known what would have been the result if Akbar Ali Khan had based his case upon the terms of the sanad and if the case had been argued before the Court on the plea that the words "rule of primogeniture" used in the sanad, meant what they would mean in English Law.

Some years after this decision was passed, the Judicial Commissioner's Court had to decide the meaning of the words "rule of primogeniture" as used in section 8 of Act I of 1869 with reference to the succession to the property of a talukdar whose name was entered in the third list. While it is to be noted that the question in that case was with regard to the meaning of the words used in an Act passed by the Legislature, and in the case of Akbar Ali Khan, the question was as to the meaning of the same words used in a sanad made several years before the Act in question was passed, and in circumstances which (as will be subsequently shown) make it possible to doubt that the same legal knowledge was possessed by the drafter of the sanad that was possessed by the drafter of the subsequent Act, the fact remains that the words "rule of primogeniture" are exactly the same, and that many of the inferences drawn in the decision of the subsequent case, would have had a bearing on the previous case, had they been argued before the Court. The case to which I refer is the well-known case of D-bi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (5). At page 323, Chamier, J. C., remarks with reference to the use of the words in section 8 of the Act: "When the Legislature used the words 'rule of primogeniture', they must have intended some known rule of succession, the details of which in its application to collateral succession, could be ascertained. There was no such rule known to the Hindu or Muhammadan Law apart from special customs, the details of which are scarcely ever alike. They were providing a rule of succession which would be applicable to Hindus, Muhammadans and Christians alike and in the circumstance, I do not think it is an extravagant assumption that they had in mind the rule of primogeniture as applied to the succession of real estate in England." Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed at page 325: "What appears to be contended for is that some other rule of primogeniture than the rule of lineal primogeniture should be applied. In the first Court, a certain custom was appealed to, to make clear or illustrate what variation from lineal primogeniture was meant, but no success attended that plea and it was not maintained at their Lordships' bar. In their opinion, the language of the sanad emanating from the British authority, was simply language conveying the ordinary meaning of the word 'primogeniture' in the Law of England." Thus their Lordships carried the matter further than the meaning of the words "rule of primogeniture" in section 8 of Act I of 1869.

As Sugbra's name was entered in List II, Act I of 1869, this in itself goes no further than declaring that the Maniarpur Estate devolved ordinarily upon a single heir according to the custom of the family on or before the 13th day of February 1856. But the point before the Court in Akbar Ali's case was not with regard to the succession according to the custom of the family, for the decision of which it would undoubtedly have been necessary to discuss the custom of gaddi-nashini proved to be applicable to the particular estate, but with regard to the succession according to the terms of the sanad, in which there was no reference to the custom of the family. In these circumstances, the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council have a direct bearing. Had the interpretation at which their Lordships arrived in the subsequent case, occurred to the minds of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, the latter would, if they had admitted a plea based on the terms of the sanad, have discussed the terms of the sanad from the point of view that the words "rule of primogeniture" meant "rule of lineal primogeniture" according to their ordinary meaning in the Law of England. In no circumstances, would the result have been different as they refused to admit the plea at the late stage when it was placed before them, but they might not have made the remark that the words "rule of primogeniture" as used in the sanad meant nothing more or less than the rule of gaddi-nashini applicable to the estate. Their conclusion that succession was governed by the Shia Law, is necessarily incomplete, as they did not consider the effect of the terms of the sanad. In no circumstances, can this case operate as res judicata as the daughters' sons were not parties to it.

I now come to the third case. Ummatul Fatima had succeeded in obtaining physical possession over the whole taluka although the names of her five sisters were entered as co-sharers. Certain sisters applied for partition in the Revenue Courts. Ummatul Fatima opposed their application, alleging that as an eldest daughter, she was by right and custom entitled to the whole estate. The Revenue Authorities referred the parties to the Civil Court for a decision of title. Two sisters, Asghari and Ruqaiya, then instituted a case against the remaining sisters. Ummatul Fatima was the real defendant, the remaining three defendants being pro forma defendants. The plaintiffs in that suit claimed a declaration that they were entitled to have their 2/6ths share partitioned. They relied on Shia Muhammadan Law. The defendant Ummatul Fatima based her case on the sanad. According to the terms of the sanad, females are excluded. She admitted that females were excluded, but set up a jus tertii on behalf of her son Agha Muhammad Jafar. In this case also the daughters' sons were not parties. While this case was pending in the Court of first instance, the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (1), dated the 18th May 1905, was pronounced. Previously the Courts in Oudh had considered that the provisions of Act I of 1869 superseded the provisions of the sanad in all cases. They based their theory upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (6), in which their Lordships had decided in 1877, in a case in which a sanad was granted with full power of alienation to the widow of the last owner, a Hindu, and to her heirs for ever, her name being entered in the first and second lists under Act I of 1869, section 8, and one condition of the grant being that in the event of her dying intestate or of any of her successors dying intestate, the estate should descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, that in suits against the widow's daughter the sanad conferred upon the widow and her heirs male the full proprietary right and title to the estate, and not merely an estate for life with remainder to the male heirs of her husband in the event of dying intestate without having alienated it in her life-time, and also that with regard to succession the limitation in the sanad was wholly superseded by Act I of 1869, and that the rights of the parties claiming by descent, must be governed by section 22 of that Act.

This decision is, of course, still fully operative, but in interpreting it the Courts had omitted to distinguish the case in which Act I of 1869 had never come into operation owing to the fact that a transfer had been made by the talukdar, who had died before the passing of the Act, in favour of a person who was not his heir-apparent, and where that transfer had taken place before the Act came into operation. In such circumstances, it was possible that the terms of the sanad would govern succession. Such a case came before their Lordships in Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (1). There Thakur Gajraj Singh, Talukdar of the Mahewa Estate, was the person with whom Samnary Settlement was made. A sanad was granted to him on the 19th October 1859, which was a grant to himself and his heirs without indication of the line of inheritance. Gajraj Singh died in 1860 and was succeeded by Girwar Singh his brother. Girwar Singh remained in possession until his death in 1865. A primogeniture sanad was granted to him. He bequeathed his estate to his nephew who succeeded him. Here the transfer had taken place before Act I of 1869 came into force. The name of Gajraj Singh was inserted in the lists prepared under Act I of 1869 although he had died many years before the Act was passed. Their Lordships decided that succession was governed by the terms of the sanad.

In the suit brought by Asghari and Ruqaiya, the two plaintiffs had at first based their title upon their rights under the Shia Law, accepting the previous decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Akbar Ali's case as laying down the rule of succession. But, in view of their Lordships' decision in Thakur Sheo Singh's case (1), they altered their plea and took a position to the effect that neither they nor Ummatul Fatima had any title at all under the terms of a sanad which excluded females, but that as they were all in joint possession, they had a right to partition of their admitted shares. The Subordinate Judge decided that as their title was good against any one but the true owner, and as the true owner was no party, they should succeed. Then followed the appeal to the Judicial Commissioner's Court which was decided on the 14th January 1900. A copy of the judgment will be found as Exhibit 26 on this record.

The decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, dated 14th January 1900, was based on the finding that none of the sisters had any title to the property. The judgment shows that both sides accepted that position,—in other words, that in that particular case, it was agreed between the parties that succession was not governed by the provisions of Act I of 1839 or by the Shia Muhammadian Law. It is clear that in that case, the parties agreed that succession was regulated by the terms of the sanad. The plaintiffs put forward that under the terms of the sanad neither they nor Ummatul Fatima had any rights at all, but that as all six sisters had attained joint possession over the property, those who wished to do so, had a perfect right to have their shares partitioned off. Ummatul Fatima's defence was that the sanad governed succession to the property, that under its terms her son Agha Muhammad Jafar was entitled to succeed, that as a matter of fact, he had succeeded and that she was holding the property for him, the title having vested in him. The third issue in that suit raised the point as to whether succession was governed by the Shia Law or by the terms of the sanad. The Judicial Commissioner's Court found that it was not proved that Ummatul Fatima's son was entitled to the property under the terms of the sanad, or that Ummatul Fatima was holding it with his implied consent, or that the property had vested in him and that she was not in a position to put forward his title as a bar to the plaintiffs' claim for partition. It was decided that as the sisters had held possession together, and had all along been under the impression that according to the provisions of the Muhammadan Law, they were equally entitled to their respective shares in the property, their claims to their respective shares should be affirmed. The Court said: "It may be and apparently is correct that they made a mistake in law, but it is beyond doubt that under a mistaken idea of the law, they gained possession and that they have held possession and enjoyed the estate in equal shares. As among themselves, they are, therefore, entitled to equal shares, and if the property is partible, the possession of the plaintiffs entitles them to partition thereof. Until the plaintiffs are ousted from possession by a rightful owner, the appellant, who is equally with them a trespasser (but who is not in possession of the share held by them), is not in law entitled to deny their right to partition. The possessory title of the plaintiffs is good against the whole world except the true owner."

Thus it is clear that in the last case, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner decided that succession to the Maniarpur Estate was neither according to the provisions of Act I of 1869, nor according to the Shia Law, but that it was according to the terms of the sanad. This conclusion was not, however, based on contest. The judgment shows that both sides agreed to this position. Ummatul Fatima set up that her son was entitled to succeed under the terms of the sanad. The other side denied the correctness of the assertion. But both sides agreed that succession would be according to the terms of the sanad. In no circumstances would this case also operate as res judicata as the sons of the daughters were not parties to it.

I now come to the present suits. They may be summarized shortly. In one suit Ghulam Abbas Khan, son of Bibi Batul, and his transferee claim possession of the whole taluka asserting that succession is governed by the terms of the sanad, and that under the terms of the sanad, Ghulam Abbas Khan is entitled to succeed under the rule of primogeniture.

In the other suit Agha Muhammad Jafar, son of Ummatul Fatima, and his transferee claim possession of the whole taluka asserting that succession is governed by the terms of the sanad and that under the terms of the sanad, Agha Muhammad Jafar is entitled to succeed under the rule of primogeniture.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided that Ghulam Abbas Khan was born before Agha Muhammad Jafar, that succession was not governed by the terms of the sanad in view of the fact that Akbar Ali Khan was not a successor of Bibi Sughra, and that Ilahi Khanam was not a successor of Akbar Ali Khan within the meaning of the words of the sanad. The words in question are:—

"It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate or of any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture."

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the word "successors" did not include a transferee or a devisee, that Akbar Ali Khan was thus not a successor of Bibi Sughra, and that from the period of Akbar Ali Khan's succession, the sanad ceased to have operation

GHULAM ABBAS KHAN v. BIBI UMMATUL FATIMA.

He decided accordingly that succession to the estate was governed by the provisions of the Shia Law, that daughters had the right to succeed in equal shares, and dismissed both suits. The present appeals are preferred.

These appeals have been argued at length. The respondents have not accepted the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on the points on which that decision has been against them, and, in consequence, most of the contentious matter before the learned Subordinate Judge has been again traversed before us. The learned Counsel for the respondents has re-asserted that succession to the estate is governed by the provisions of section 22, Act I of 1869. He has not pressed the point strongly, but he has not abandoned it and I consider it better to take it up in order that the position may be cleared with reference to any possible contest that may arise in the future. The words of section 22 which have a bearing on this case are, "If any talukdar whose name shall be inserted in the second of the lists mentioned in section 8, or his heir, or legatee, shall die intestate as to his estate." The dispute is as to the succession to Ilahi Khanam. She was not a talukdar. Was she an heir? She was clearly not an heir as the word "heir" refers to persons who succeed by intestate succession. Was she a legatee? The word "legatee" is defined in section 2, Act I of 1869, as a person to whom property is bequeathed under the special provisions of Act I of 1869. That section has been amended by the United Provinces Act III of 1910, and a "legatee" is now defined as a person to whom there has been or is bequeathed an estate or portion of an estate whether before or after the commencement of this Act. She took a portion of the property under the terms of the deed of hiba-bil-uwaz executed by her deceased husband, and the remainder of the property under the terms of a Will executed by her husband. Both these documents were executed after the 12th January 1869. With regard to the first property, she is clearly not a legatee. With regard to the second property she was the legatee of Akbar Ali Khan. But Akbar Ali Khan was not a talukdar. So, in order to bring the provisions of section 22 directly into operation, it would be necessary to show that Akbar Ali Khan was an heir or legatee of Bibi Sughra. According to the terms of the explanation in section 2, United Provinces Act III of 1910, the words "heir" and "legatee" are not restricted to the immediate heirs and legatees of the talukdar. So if it can be shown that Akbar Ali Khan was an heir or legatee of Bibi Sughra, it might be held, if the amendment has retrospective effect, that section 22 would operate with regard to the succession of the 43 villages. Akbar Ali Khan was not the "heir" of Bibi Sughra. Apart from the fact that he was not the heir under the provisions of Act I of 1869, or under the terms of the sanad, he was not an "heir" because he succeeded as a "devisee." He succeeded under the provisions of the Will dated 29th June 1862, and was a person to whom Bibi Sughra who was a talukdar, had bequeathed an estate under the provisions of a Will made prior to the passing of the Act. As the Act stood before amendment he was certainly not a "legatee," as has been clearly decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jugatpal Singh (2). But as the words "under the special provisions of this Act" and "under the same provisions" have now been deleted from the definitions of "heir" and "legatee," and as under the provisions of section 2, United Provinces Act III of 1910, a "legatee" is a person to whom there has been bequeathed an estate before the commencement of the Act, he would be a legatee if the section has retrospective effect. But the section has only retrospective effect according to the conditions of section 21, United Provinces Act III of 1910, and that section contains the following words:—

"Nothing contained in the said sections shall affect suits pending at the commencement of this Act, or shall be deemed to vest in or confer upon any person any right or title to any estate, or any portion thereof, or any interest therein, which is, at the commencement of this Act, vested in any other person who would have been entitled to retain the same if this Act had not been passed; and the right or title of such other person shall not be affected by anything contained in the said sections."

The recent amendment of the Oudh Estates Act would completely alter the question of succession to the Maniarpur Estate. The provisions of section 22 of the unamended Act could not directly affect the Maniarpur Estate, as Akbar Ali Khan was according to those provisions neither a talukdar, nor the heir, nor legatee of the talukdar. Had he been a talukdar, or the heir or legatee of the talukdar, the succession with respect to a portion of the 43 villages would have gone to his heirs, for it is to be noted that the Will under the provisions of which Ilahi Khanam succeeded to the estate was invalid under the provisions of Act I of 1869 and could only affect a portion of the property devised under the provisions of the Shia Law. It was invalid under the provisions of Act I of 1869, because Akbar Ali Khan died within sixteen days of making it, and it could only be partially operative under the provisions of the Shia Law, because he could not bequeath more than one-third of his estate under the provisions of that Law. If succession to the estate were governed by the provisions of section 22, Act I of 1869, the terms of the sanad had no force, but this Will can only be held valid under the powers given to Akbar Ali Khan by the terms of the sanad. Therefore, the succession with regard to a portion, in any circumstances, lay to the heirs of Akbar Ali Khan and would not have gone to Ilahi Khanam. Thus the amendment of the Act would have the effect of depriving Ilahi Khanam and her heirs of certain rights which they had prior to the amendment, and conferring those rights upon the heirs of Akbar Ali Khan. The question of limitation may be left out. As the old law stood, the heirs of Akbar Ali Khan had no rights, and I can only understand the provisions as to vesting, to exclude the question of limitation, as it is obvious that no persons could in the past have asserted rights with success if they did not then possess them. Thus, as I understand it, a portion of the estate at any rate became vested in Ilahi Khanam and her heirs, and for this reason, I do not consider that the subsequent amendment of the Oudh Estates Act affects the position. Thus the provisions of section 22, Act I of 1869, do not directly affect the question of succession.

The next point raised by the learned Counsel for the respondents is that the provisions of section 14 of Act I of 1869 operate to bring the provisions of section 22 into operation. The reference is to section 14 before amendment, as the new section 14 inserted by the United Provinces Act III of 1910 has no retrospective effect. The words of the old section are as follows:—

"If any talukdar or grantee shall heretofore," i. e., before 12th January 1869, "have transferred or bequeathed, or if any talukdar or grantee, or his heir or legatee, shall hereafter transfer or bequeath, the whole or any portion of his estate to another talukdar or grantee, or to such younger son as is referred to in section 13, clause 2, or to a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of this Act to the estate or to a portion thereof if the transferor or testator had died without having made the transfer, and intestate, the transferee or legatee and his heirs and legatees shall have the same rights and powers in regard to the property to which he or they may have become entitled under or by virtue of such transfer or bequest, and shall hold the same subject to the same conditions and to the same rules of succession as the transferor or testator."

In order to prevail on this contention, it is necessary for the respondents to show that Akbar Ali Khan would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to the estate of Bibi Sughra if she had died without having made the transfer and intestate. The subsequent transfer by Akbar Ali Khan to Ilahi Khanam may be left out of account, for Akbar Ali Khan was neither a talukdar, nor the heir, nor legatee of a talukdar within the meaning of the section in question.

The leading case which guides the interpretation of the words in question, is the case of Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Ras Jagatpal Singh (2). That case came before the Judicial Commissioner's Court in 1900, and the report of that Court's proceedings will be found in Ras Jagatpal Singh v. Thakurain Balraj Kuar (3). The facts in that case were as follows:—Ras Pirthipal Singh was the owner of taluqa Raepur Bichore. He had an elder son Jagmohan Singh and a younger son Bisheshar Bakhsh. Pirthipal Singh died before the passing of the Act, having executed a transfer under the terms of which he was succeeded by his younger son before the Act came into force. Bisheshar Bakhsh died after the Act came into force having been predeceased by the elder brother. Jagmohan Singh's son claimed to succeed under the provisions of clause 6, section 22, Act I of 1969, against the widows of Bisheshar Bakhsh. In that case it was admitted that, inasmuch as Bisheshar Bakhsh had succeeded Pirthipal Singh under the terms of a transfer before the passing of the Act, the provisions of section 22 could not be applied directly to govern the succession. But it was urged that section 14 had application, because Bisheshar Bakhsh was a possible heir of his father. The Judicial Commissioner's Court was of opinion that any person mentioned in section 22 as a possible heir was a person who "would" have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to the estate if the testator had died intestate within the meaning of section 14. They interpreted the word "would" as being equivalent to the word "might." Their Lordships of the Privy Council took a different view. The quotation from that judgment is: "Their Lordships think that the learned Judges in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner have gone too far in holding as they did that any person mentioned in section 22 as a possible heir may be said to be 'a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to the estate if the testator had died intestate' within the meaning of section 14." They think that the expression 'would have succeeded' must be confined to persons in the special line of succession that would have been applicable to the particular case if the transferor or testator had died intestate and the death had occurred at the date of the transfer or, in the case of a gift by Will, at the time when the succession opened. In short, they think that the expression 'a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act' is equivalent to 'the person or one of the persons to whom the estate would have descended according to the provisions of the special clause of section 22 applicable to the particular case.' Their Lordships do not agree with the view of the learned Counsel for the respondent that clause 2 of section 13 was introduced by mistake and may be disregarded altogether. On the contrary, they think that that clause throws a good deal of light on the words in dispute. A younger son of a talukdar named in List III or List V, is no doubt among the possible heirs of his father, but he is not within the prescribed line of succession if the father leaves an eldest son or a male lineal descendant of an eldest son.

"The construction which commends itself to their Lordships, gives a meaning to every part of the sections under consideration. If a transfer or bequest is made to a person in the prescribed line of succession, there is reason for placing the transferee or legatee in the same position with regard to succession to the estate as the transferor or testator, but if the prescribed line of succession is broken by a transfer or bequest of the entailed estate to a person outside the prescribed line, it seems not unreasonable that the fetter of the entail, such as it is, should no longer apply to the estate."

The learned Counsel for the respondents has argued that the judgment of their Lordships goes no further than to lay down that a transfer to a person coming under any of the clauses contained in section 22, brings the transfer within the provisions of section 14, even though that person would be excluded by a senior member in his own class. With regard to the facts of this particular case, he urges that, inasmuch as Bibi Sughra's brothers were her heirs, a bequest by her to any brother would bring the provisions of section 14 into operation. He lays great stress on the words "to the person or one of the persons to whom the estate could have descended." I do not consider that the decision of their Lordships can be so interpreted. The clauses in section 22 are not arranged according to such a definite principle of grouping as that which he suggested. When they are examined this fact stands out clearly.

GHULAM ABRAS KHAN v. BIBI UMMATUL FATIMA.

The first clause contains the eldest son and his male lineal descendants without separating the relative rights of the latter to succeed. The second clause refers to the male lineal descendants of the eldest son in the case where he has predeceased the intestate, separating the relative rights both of the lines and the members to an infinite degree. The first and second clauses might have been combined to form one clause. The third clause takes into account the extinction of the line of the eldest son and lays down the rule of succession in a similar manner with regard to the relative rights of the sons and their lineal descendants to an infinite degree. Here again, there seems no reason why this clause should not have been combined with the second clause and the first clause. The fourth clause takes the peculiar incident of a daughter's son, who has been treated by the talukdar in all respects as his own son, and his male lineal descendants. The history of the legislation indicates that this exceptional treatment of a daughter's son who has been in effect treated as a real son of the intestate, was introduced to meet the wishes of a particular talukdar. This explains the introduction of the peculiar case. The fifth clause refers to a person adopted by the talukdar and not to such person's lineal descendants. The sixth clause takes the case of brothers and lays down rules for their succession which follow on the same lines as the succession of sons, but, whereas in the case of sons a sub-division is made into three clauses, in the case of brothers the rules are compressed into one clause. It was presumably only for considerations of convenience of drafting that the sixth clause was not made into three clauses to read as follows:—

"1. Or in default of such adopted son, then to the eldest brother of such talukdar or grantee, heir or legatee, and his male lineal descendants subject as aforesaid.

"2. Or if such eldest brother of such talukdar or grantee, heir or legatee shall have died in his life-time, leaving male lineal descendants, then to the eldest and every other son of such eldest brother, successively, according to their respective seniorities, and their respective male lineal descendants, subject as aforesaid.

"3. Or if such eldest brother of such talukdar or grantee, heir or legatee shall have died in the life-time of the talukdar or grantee, heir or legatee, without leaving male lineal descendants, then to the second and every other brother of the said talukdar or grantee, heir or legatee, successively, according to their respective seniorities, and their respective male lineal descendants, subject as aforesaid."

The meaning would have been absolutely the same. I need not continue discussion of the clauses further. This is sufficient to show that the grouping in the clauses cannot be held to bind the rule of succession therein. In fact with regard to the first six clauses the grouping might be arranged in a perfectly different manner and the rule of succession could be stated in the following ways:—

"If any talukdar or grantee whose name shall be inserted in the second, third, or fifth of the lists mentioned in section 8, or his heir or legatee, shall die intestate as to his estate, such estate shall descend as follows:—

"1. To the eldest son and his male lineal descendants.

"2. To the second son and the male lineal descendants of the second son.

"2 (a). To the third son and the male lineal descendants of the third son.

"2 (b). To the fourth son and the male lineal descendants of the fourth son.

* * * * *

"2 (n). To the *n*th son and the male lineal descendants of the *n*th son.

"3. To the son of a daughter treated by the intestate in all respects as his own son and to his male lineal descendants.

"4. To a person adopted by the intestate.

"5. To the eldest brother and the male lineal descendants of the eldest brother.

"5 (a). To the next eldest brother and the male lineal descendants of the next eldest brother.

* * * * *

"5 (n). To the *n*th next eldest brother and the male lineal descendants of the *n*th next eldest brother.

"A person in each class is excluded from succession by the existence of any person in a class above. Within the class, those of the lower line, how high soever, are excluded by those of the higher line how low soever."

The decision of their Lordships appears to me to lay down that in the case of a transfer which would come within the provisions of section 14, it is necessary first to look at the following point. What is the class of the transferee according to the classification which I have adopted? If at the time of the transfer (or, in the case of a gift by a Will, at the time when succession opened) there is no person alive in a superior class and the transferee is thus a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to the estate if the testator had died intestate, the provisions of section 14 will come into operation, and it is thus that the words "The person or one of the persons to whom the estate would have descended according to the provisions of the especial clause of section 22 applicable to the particular case," should be interpreted.

I am supported in this view first by the fact that, if the view suggested by the learned Counsel for the respondents (which is the only alternative view that has been placed before us) be taken, its acceptance would involve the treatment of the words "would have succeeded" as equivalent to the words "might have succeeded." In the second place, the subsequent remarks of their Lordships in the latter paragraph which I have quoted, appear to make the matter absolutely clear. Their Lordships say: "If a transfer or bequest is made to a person in the prescribed line of succession, there is reason for placing the transferee or legatee in the same position with regard to succession to the estate as the transferor or testator." In other words, their Lordships considered that if the transferor transfer in such a manner as not to break the line of succession, section 14 has application, and they continue, "But if the prescribed line of succession is broken by a transfer or bequest of the entailed estate to a person outside the prescribed line, it seems not unreasonable that the fetter of the entail, such as it is, should no longer apply to the estate," that is to say, that section 14 has not application.

Thus the question for determination appears to be, is the line of the succession to the estate broken? According to the provisions of section 22, clause 6, the succession to Bibi Sughra's estate, if she died intestate, went first to her eldest brother and his male lineal descendants, then to her second brother and his male lineal descendants, then to the third brother and his male lineal descendants, and finally to the fourth brother and his male lineal descendants. It is admitted that at the time of her death Jafar Ali Khan, her eldest brother, and Ghulam Husain Khan the son of Hasan Ali Khan, her second brother, were alive. So it is clear that by bequeathing the estate to Akbar Ali Khan she broke the prescribed line of succession and cut the fetter of the entail such as it was. Thus I consider that the provisions of section 14 cannot be applied.

I now come to the next point. Do the provisions of section 15 apply?

At first sight, it would appear that they must apply, because reading together sections 14 and 15, it would seem almost a necessary conclusion that succession to a transferee under any transfer made by a talukdar before 12th January 1869 would, if made to a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to the estate if the transferor had died without making the transfer and intestate, be governed by the provisions of section 14, and succession to a transferee under a transfer made to a person who would not have so succeeded would be governed by the provisions of section 15. But, before this conclusion can be drawn, it is necessary to consider whether there may not have been conditions attached to the transferred property which would take it out of the scope of section 15 even in the latter case. The Crown Grants Act, Act XV of 1895, states in its third section: "All provisions, restrictions, conditions and limitations over contained in any such grant or transfer as aforesaid, shall be valid and take effect according to their tenor any rule of law, Statute or enactment of the Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding."

GHULAM ABBAS KHAN v. BIBI UMMATUL FATIMA.

Thus, if the terms of the primogeniture sanad govern succession to the property, succession to property transferred to a person who would not have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act, might not be governed by the law that would apply if the transferee or legatee had bought the same property from a person not being a talukdar, but might be governed by the terms of the sanad. This view is supported by the pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (1): "Whatever force such a contention might otherwise have had, appears to their Lordships to be removed by the Act to which their attention was called, Act XV of 1895." Their Lordships then proceed to quote the section of the Act to which I have already referred. The only argument that can be advanced against the contention that the terms of the sanad might govern such a transfer or bequest in preference to the provisions of section 15, would be based on the words of the explanation to section 3 of the United Provinces Act III of 1910. This explanation is, "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Crown Grants Act, Act XV of 1895, the conditions of the sanad relating to succession, in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, shall not apply to the estate." This portion of the enactment does not, however, change the situation on this particular point, inasmuch as section 3 refers to the heritable and transferable rights of talukdars in their estates, and the explanation refers only to the succession to the estates of a talukdar. We are here not dealing with succession to the estate of a talukdar but with succession to the estate of a transferee of a person who succeeded partly by virtue of a transfer and partly by virtue of a bequest from a person who had succeeded by virtue of a bequest from a talukdar, who would not have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act to the estate if the talukdar had died intestate. In these circumstances, the particular legislation which has excluded the operation of the Crown Grants Act in one instance, has not excluded it in the present instance.

I now proceed to the next point. I have considered whether the provisions of Act I of 1869, either amended or unamended, can affect the succession to the estate of the late Bibi Ilahi Khanam, and I find that the provisions of that Act do not govern the succession. The question is then narrowed down as to whether the succession is governed by the terms of the primogeniture sanad or the terms of the Shia Muhammadan Law, and it may be stated to shorten the argument that both parties agree, and I agree with them that, if the terms of the sanad do not govern succession to the estate, succession will be governed by the rules of Muhammadan Law applicable to Shias.

It is necessary now to examine the terms of the sanad. In the first place according to the Crown Grants Act which, not having been excluded, has full effect in the circumstance of this case, the terms of the sanad must be operative if they have application. It is unnecessary to labour that point, as it is apparent. The learned Counsel for the respondents has argued that the terms of the sanad fell into abeyance, and that they would not be revived. He relied as authority for this proposition on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh's case (6). But it is not necessary to pursue the point whether, if the sanad had become superseded, it could have revived, as I am of opinion that in the present case the terms of the sanad have never been superseded. Bibi Sugra transferred the estate to Akbar Ali Khan by a testamentary disposition which she was entitled to make only under the terms of the sanad. Akbar Ali Khan transferred a portion of the estate by a transfer, and the remainder by a testamentary bequest, to Bibi Ilahi Khanam. He was entitled to make the transfer and the testamentary bequest under the terms of the sanad. He was not entitled to make a testamentary bequest affecting the whole of his property otherwise than under the terms of the sanad. As I have already shown, succession in the Maniarpur Estate has never been regulated by the provisions of Act I of 1869, amended or unamended, and the provisions of that Act have had no application to succession to the estate.

The contest to the effect that it is not proved that a sanad was given, has now been abandoned, and the parties agree as to the fact that Bibi Sughra received a sanad of the nature known as the "primogeniture sanad" in the exact form given in Syke's Compendium of the Oudh Talukdari Law, Appendix E, No. III. It will be convenient to quote the form in full:—

"Know all men that whereas by the Proclamation of March 1853, by His Excellency the Right Hon'ble the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, all proprietary rights in the soil of Oude, with a few special exceptions, were confiscated and passed to the British Government, which became free to dispose of them as it pleased, I, George Udny Yule, Officiating Chief Commissioner of Oude, under the authority of His Excellency the Governor-General of India in Council, do hereby confer on you the full proprietary right, title and possession of the estate of consisting of the villages as per list attached to the kubooliat you have executed, of which the present Government revenue is.....

"Therefore, this sunnud is given you in order that it may be known to all whom it may concern that the above estate has been conferred upon you and your heirs for ever, subject to the payment of such annual revenue as may from time to time be imposed, and to the conditions of surrendering all arms, destroying all forts, preventing and reporting crime, rendering any service you may be called upon to perform, and of showing constant good faith, loyalty, zeal and attachment to the British Government according to the provisions of the engagement which you have executed, the breach of any one of which at any time shall be held to annul the right and title now conferred on you and your heirs.

"It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate or of any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, but you and all your successors shall have full power to alienate the estate either in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest or adoption to whomsoever you please.

"It is also a condition of this grant that you will, so far as is in your power, promote the agricultural prosperity of your estate, and that all holding under you shall be secured in the possession of all the subordinate rights they formerly enjoyed. As long as the above obligations are observed by you and your heirs in good faith, so long will the British Government maintain you and your heirs as proprietors of the above-mentioned estate, in confirmation of which I herewith attach my seal and signature."

The learned Subordinate Judge has found rightly that succession was regulated to the estate under the terms of the sanad while the estate was in the possession of Bibi Sughra, and his reason for deciding that the terms of the sanad have no application in the present case, is because he finds that the word "successors" means "heirs." Considerable argument has been devoted in these appeals to the meaning of the word "successors." The Counsel for the appellants has argued that the word "successors" has a very wide meaning and that it includes both persons who succeeded by virtue of a testamentary disposition and transferees. Before I proceed to examine the meaning of the words, I shall discuss the circumstances in which the sanad was issued.

After the conquest of Oudh and the Confiscation Proclamation of Lord Canning, title to the estates of the larger proprietors was re-conveyed by the grant of the sanad in the form given in Syke's book, Appendix E, Form II. The determination to make these grants, was mainly with Lord Canning, the Governor-General of the period, and the form in which these grants were made was the form sanctioned by him. The earlier sanad conferred on the grantees an absolute estate, something of the nature of an estate in fee simple as known to the Law of England, but nothing was laid down as to succession. Shortly afterwards, the question arose whether conditions should not be superadded to regulate succession to such estates. The Chief Commissioner of Oudh held the view that it would be to the advantage of the talukdars if their estates were made non-transferable, and succession was regulated by a strict rule unalterable by the holder which would partake to some extent of the nature of an entail as known to the Law of England. He apparently did not intend to introduce the exact rules of entail, for he seems to have desired to permit succession by collaterals. His main object was to prevent transfer or alienability. The Governor-General refused to accept the views of the Chief Commissioner. He considered that the holders should have free power to dispose of their estates as they pleased by sale, gift or bequest, and, while he agreed that in the case of intestate succession, the estate should remain impartible and descend to a single heir to be selected according to the principles of the law of primogeniture or according to the custom known as gaddi-nashini or descent to a single heir, which was stated to be prevalent in some thirty families in Oudh, he refused to deprive the holder while alive, of his right to transfer the estate. The discussion will be found in the introduction to Mr. Syke's book. It is not necessary to follow its details in full. But when considering the meaning of the terms of the primogeniture sanad which contains the final decision of the Crown at the time, it is necessary to examine the conditions under which the Governor-General was working. In Oudh at the present day, words used in Indian Legislative enactments and in legal documents drawn up in English in India have come to bear meanings, which are well understood by the judiciary and members of the legal profession and which are not always the meanings attached to those words in the Law of England. But at the period when this primogeniture sanad was drawn up, hardly any legal phraseology existed in India other than the legal phraseology of English Law. Amongst the Judges of the High Courts and the Bar was found to some slight extent, special Indian legal phraseology in the English language. But in Oudh and the North-Western Provinces, there would not have been ordinarily understanding of legal phraseology otherwise than according to the meaning that it bore in England. In the deliberations of the Government of India, legal advice was given by an English lawyer whose knowledge of special Indian legal phraseology could not have been extensive owing to the short number of years that he spent in India as a Member of Council. In drafting a Legislative enactment or a grant or deed, the Governor-General would usually indicate his wishes to a legal adviser, who would record those wishes in the legal phraseology known to the Law of England, and in correspondence by the Government of India where legal terms were used, the terms would ordinarily have the same meaning as they would have in the Law of England. I, therefore, consider that in the interpretation of both the letters and correspondence the only possible course is to take the meaning of the legal terms to be as they would be understood by a practising lawyer in England at that period. The reason why I find it necessary to determine this question is, because there is frequently a real distinction to be drawn between English and Indian terms. I may take for example the meaning of the word "primogeniture." It has been argued that, when Lord Canning uses the word "primogeniture" in the sanad, he does not mean "lineal primogeniture" as known to the Law of England but the custom of gaddi-nashini or descent of an estate to a single heir existent in some thirty families in Oudh during the period. I am not satisfied that Lord Canning did not understand the distinction between the English rule of lineal primogeniture and the custom of gaddi-nashini, as I find in one passage of a letter from him, quoted in Mr. Syke's book at page 85 of the introduction, that he differentiates primogeniture from the transmission of estates undivided to an heir. But even on the supposition that he considered that the rule of primogeniture was equivalent to the rule of gaddi-nashini, it cannot be decided that, if a grant issued by him declared that succession should take place according to the rule of primogeniture, a Court should interpret that document as having the effect of declaring that succession should take place according to the custom of gaddi-nashini. The custom of gaddi-nashini as stated in the correspondence existed in some thirty families in Oudh. At that time, it was a custom in some thirty families in Oudh for an estate to descend to a single heir. There is nothing to show that succession was regulated by the same rules in every case. In one family, females may have been excluded, and in another females may not have been excluded, in a third, collaterals may have been preferred to junior descendants of a senior line, and the variations may have been (and probably were) considerable. It is too much to suppose that Lord Canning had any intimate acquaintance with the variations of succession in families in which this custom prevailed. There is no reason to suppose that the Chief Commissioner had intimate acquaintance with such variations, or that if he had intimate acquaintance with such variations he informed Lord Canning of their existence. The Governor-General was advised that in some thirty families in Oudh the estate descended as an impartible whole to a single heir, and this one element—that the estate descended as an impartible whole to a single heir—apart from variations with regard to rules of succession—was common to the families having that custom, and provided one element in common with succession in English Law under the rule of primogeniture. To a statesman, this might well represent sufficient cause for imposing succession according to the rule of lineal primogeniture in the case of intestacy on all grantees who should desire to accept the primogeniture sanad. It is to be remembered that it was optional for talukdars to accept or not to accept the primogeniture sanad. If Lord Canning considered that the rule of lineal primogeniture already existed in those thirty families or if he knew that it did not exist, the result would have been exactly the same. When the sanad abated the rule of primogeniture it meant the rule of primogeniture, and those grantees who accepted the grants were bound by the condition.

I now return to the consideration of the terms of the sanad. It will be observed that the sanad is full of terms well known to English Law, but the estate created by it, is not an estate known to English Law. To a certain extent, it resembles an estate in fee simple, but is differentiated from an estate in fee simple by the fact that under its terms, no female can succeed. In the case of an estate in fee simple, in absence of males, females succeed as joint co-tenants. It bears some resemblance to an estate in tail male, but is differentiated from that by the fact that a collateral can succeed under the terms of the sanad whereas no collateral can succeed to an estate in tail male. No rule of succession is laid down in the sanad.

After this general examination of the contents, I now proceed to an examination of the particular words. The first word is the important word "successors." "It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate or of any of your successors dying intestate." The word "successor" is capable of a very large number of meanings both legally and according to the common use of the word. Literally successor is the converse of predecessor. The successor is the person who comes afterwards. It would be difficult, however, to find a legal document in which such wide sense is given to the words. The word "successor" may mean the successor on death, either as an heir by intestate succession or by devise. In a different context, it may mean a successor-in-office, and in certain circumstances it may include a transferee. There is nothing in the context of the sanad repugnant to the interpretation that it includes a transferee and a devisee. The conclusion of learned Subordinate Judge that it is a synonym for heirs, does not commend itself to me. If it had been intended to regulate succession only to the grantee and his heirs, there seems no reason why the word "heirs" should not have been used. The learned Counsels on both sides have appealed to contemporanea expositio to support their respective views. On the one side, it has been pointed out that in 1862 Lord Canning introduced a draft Bill for the regulation of succession to the estates in Oudh, in the second section of which it was provided that a transferee or devisee should have the same powers and hold the estate subject to the same rules of succession as the original talukdar or grantee. From this, it is argued that Lord Canning intended the word "successors" to include transferees and devisees. On the other hand, it has been argued that when the provisions of Act I of 1869 were under discussion in the Legislative Assembly, Sir John Strachey explained that it was not the intention of the Crown that the obligation devolving upon talukdars should devolve upon persons of non-land-holding families to whom portions of talukdari estates had been transferred. From this it is argued that the word "successors" was intended to include neither transferees nor devisees, although from the words used by Sir John Strachey, it is difficult to deduce any desire to lay down a rule of succession for devisees belonging to the same family other than the rule applying to the original talukdar. I do not consider that the case has been advanced by the above arguments. The latter argument is beside the point. In no circumstances, can it be argued that the intention of Sir John Strachey could assist us in arriving at the meaning of the words used by Lord Canning many years before. Nor can I take it that the desire of Lord Canning, expressed in 1862, to apply the same rules of succession to transferees and devisees as were applicable to talukdars and their heirs, can indicate that in a sanad, which was drafted at a period sufficiently long before 1862 to enable Lord Canning to reconsider the question, the word "successor" must be held to include transferees and devisees. But, in view of the difficulty of arriving at the exact meaning of the word from the context, I think that I am justified in using contemporanea expositio to a slight extent, under the conditions laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Raghojirao Saheb v. Lakshmanrao Saheb (7). Here the word is admittedly capable of a variety of constructions. The document which I find of value is the letter of Lord Canning, dated 15th July 1860, quoted at pages 89 et seq. in Mr. Syke's book. It is in this letter that Lord Canning discusses the whole question of succession with a view to the drafting of this very primogeniture sanad, and, as I shall show later on, some passages of the letter have been reproduced almost bodily in the sanad itself. The word "successor" is used in this letter in a manner which sufficiently indicates the meaning of Lord Canning. He says in paragraph 7: "As on the one hand, it will be in the power of every talukdar to refrain from making a Will and so to allow his estate to devolve undivided on his nearest heir, or, if childless, to adopt a son who will inherit the whole of his estate or to bequeath it by Will to any one person whom he may wish to designate as his successor, so, on the other hand, it is right that he should be at liberty to bequeath his estate to more than one person, in accordance with Hindu or Muhammadan Law or otherwise as may suit his pleasure. Though the present holder of a talook may be in favour of the rule of primogeniture, his successor may be of a different opinion."

GHULAM ABBAS KHAN v. BIBI UMMATUL FATIMA.

The Governor-General here indicates the word "successor" directly as a devisee and lower down includes both heirs and devisees as successors. In other words, he considered the word "successor" to mean "successor on death." The close connection between this letter and the sanad is shown in the 8th paragraph, where he authorizes the Chief Commissioner to issue new sanads declaring, in addition to the conditions already sanctioned by the Governor-General, that the estate, in case of intestacy, shall descend to the nearest male heir, and adding, by way of proviso, that the talukdar has full power to alienate his estate either in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest or adoption to whomsoever he pleases. In the primogeniture sanad it is stated: "It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate or of any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, but you and all your successors shall have full power to alienate the estate either in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest or adoption to whomsoever you please."

There is no indication in the above letter that the Governor-General desired to bind transferees during life-time in the same manner as successors after death. In fact, after reading the letter carefully I am drawn to the conclusion that it was then his deliberate intention not to bind transferees during life-time in this manner. In 1862, he appears to have been of a different opinion. But the sanad in question was executed to express his intentions in 1860. I, therefore, interpret the word "successors" to mean "successors on death" to include both heirs and devisees, but not to include transferees during life-time. Thus I find that the main reason given by the learned Subordinate Judge for holding that the terms of the sanad are not applicable, fails. I have already found that the terms of the sanad governed the succession from Bibi Sughra to Akbar Ali Khan, and that they were complied with owing to the fact that she devised her estate to Akbar Ali Khan by a Will in accordance with the authority given her by the terms of the sanad. I find that Akbar Ali Khan was her successor according to the terms of the sanad, that he, as he was allowed by the terms of the sanad, transferred a portion of the property in his life-time and the remainder by a bequest at his death to Bibi Ilahi Khanam, and that Bibi Ilahi Khanam was his successor according to the terms of the sanad. Thus the terms of the sanad govern succession to the property of Bibi Ilahi Khanam who has died intestate. It remains to consider whether either of the appellants has established a right to succeed according to the terms of the sanad. I here dispose of one point of fact. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that Ghulam Abbas Khan was born before Agha Muhammad Jafar. After examining the evidence and hearing the arguments upon this point, I arrive at the same conclusion.

In order that one of the appellants may succeed under the terms of the sanad, it is necessary to show that he is the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture. The words "rule of primogeniture" can only be interpreted as "rule of lineal primogeniture." I have already discussed this point and given my reasons for considering that the finding of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (5), although it directly referred to the meaning of the words "rule of primogeniture" as used in section 8, Act I of 1869, is good authority for deciding that the words "rule of primogeniture" in the sanad mean the "rule of lineal primogeniture" as known to English Law. This condition, that the estate should descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, does not, however, indicate in itself any rule of succession. The condition in the sanad gives preference to persons in the senior line how low soever as against persons in the junior line how high so ever, but gives no indication as to the principle to be adopted in excluding a line. In a case in which the descent of all lines is through males there can be no difficulty, but in such a case as this, where the main question for decision is whether persons deriving their descent through females should or should not be included, the fact that the nearest male heir is to be selected according to the rule of primogeniture, affords no indication with regard to the point to be decided.

The learned Counsel for the appellants argued that the effect of the sanad was to enact a rule of succession according to the personal law of the parties modified by the clause of the sanad, which excluded females from inheritance. It was suggested that the heirs or class of heirs who would succeed according to the ordinary law, should be found, that those excluded under the sanad should be rejected, that the next class should be sought, and that when it had been ascertained who were the heirs who would succeed under the ordinary law who were not excluded under the terms of the sanad, the rule of lineal primogeniture should be applied. There was a further suggestion that the principles of English Law could be adopted. I am unable to see how the principles of English Law with regard to succession can afford any assistance in the determination of the person who has a right to succeed under the terms of the sanad, for, as has been already stated, the estate created under the terms of the sanad is not an estate known to the Law of England and I can find no general principles in the Law of England which can be applied to an estate unknown to that law. The general principles governing succession to an estate in fee simple or an estate in tail male or any other estate known to the Law of England are based upon conventions and in some instances, upon legal fictions peculiar to each form of estate, and there is no general principle of succession in the English Law which, according to my view, could have been in the minds of the framers of the sanad. The learned Counsel for the appellants would have it that, as under the Muhammadan Law applicable to Shias daughters' sons would be heirs in the absence of daughters and would exclude brothers, the proper course for this Court to take would be to ignore the existence of the mothers of the appellants, and find that the appellants were heirs as they are males, and that the nearest according to the rule of lineal primogeniture would be entitled to succeed. There was, of course, a diversity of opinion as to which should succeed, Agha Muhammad Jafar claiming as a member of the senior line and Ghulam Abbas Khan claiming as the older of the two cousins. There is a general objection to the application of the Muhammadan Law in this connection which is that, as the Muhammadan Law does not exclude daughters from inheritance and as the whole principles of inheritance, under the Shia Law contain the inherent principle that females are not excluded from inheritance, any attempt to apply Muhammadan Law when an inherent principle is violated is not applying Muhammadan Law but something which is neither Muhammadan Law, nor English Law, nor any other known system of law. In the next place, the suggestion for the appellants is open to a further and more serious objection. Even if Muhammadan Law were applied, and it were superadded that daughters were excluded from inheritance, how can a daughter's son have any title to inherit except through his mother? If she had no title, how could he have any title? Against this objection, it was urged that the Muhammadan Law excludes in certain instances persons from inheritance but does not exclude their descendants. The persons excluded under the Shia Law from inheritance whose descendants are not excluded from inheritance are apostates, murderers of the person whose estate is inherited, and slaves. But the principle guiding their exclusion is obvious. In each case, it is taken that the person so excluded has died from the date of his disqualification. From the time that a Shia Muhammadan has renounced his religion, from the time that the murderer of the intestate has committed the murder and from the time that the freeman has become a slave, he ceases to inherit, because according to a comprehensible fiction he is dead civilly. His death lets in his descendants in his place.

I can find no authority for the inheritance of the children of such persons born after the disability. The children of an apostate born after his apostasy are not likely to be Muhammadans, the case of the children of a murderer born after the commission of the murder, would hardly require treatment at the hands of a Muhammadan jurist, because the property of the intestate would have been divided long before such children could have been born, and the children of a slave born after he had become a slave would hardly be free. But in a case in which persons are disqualified from inheritance by reason of sex, the disqualification, as I have already stated, is unknown to the Muhammadan Law. It cannot be considered that they have died civilly. It must be considered they have never been born. Thus they cannot be taken into account and can provide, as far as I can see, no title to their descendants. The case for the appellants on this point is based upon the assumption that the children of daughters in such a case would succeed in virtue of their own title to their grandfather or grandmother because they are of the same blood, and the only reason that could be assigned for giving them such a position would be that the blood of the intestate ran in their veins. I cannot see that this circumstance would assist them. The mere fact that the blood of a person runs in the veins of his descendants, is not in itself under the Muhammadan or any other system of law, a sufficient reason for allowing succession. For example, the son of an illegitimate son could not inherit under Muhammadan Law from the illegitimate son's father, the reason being that unless there has been marriage, the existence of the child is ignored. Similarly here it would appear that the disqualification of the daughter would entail the disqualification of her heirs. It has further been argued on behalf of the respondents that daughters' sons cannot possibly be considered nearest male heirs when their mothers are alive under the Muhammadan Law, because they are not heirs at all. It is perfectly true that, during the life-time of the mother, a daughter's son is not an heir under the Shia Law. If he is not an heir, it is difficult to see how he can be considered to be the nearest heir. I am not, however, of opinion that Muhammadan Law can be applied in interpreting the terms of the sanad. I do not find any justification for interpreting the words "nearest male heir" as "nearest male heir according to the personal law of the grantee." That is in fact the position for which the appellants are striving.

In Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chantirahau Singh (5), Chamier, J. C., remarked: "When the Legislature used the words 'rule of primogeniture', they must have intended some known rule of succession the details of which in its application to collateral succession could be ascertained. There was no such rule known to the Hindu or Muhammadan Law apart from special customs, the details of which are scarcely ever alike. They were providing a rule of succession which would be applicable to Hindus, Muhammadans and Christians alike and in the circumstance I do not think it is an extravagant assumption that they had in the mind, the rule of primogeniture as applied to the succession of real estate in England." Their Lordships of the Privy Council neither assented with nor dissented from these observations of Chamier, J. C. But as I read it, their decision went to some extent to support the correctness of the view enunciated by him. I think that, in considering the question of interpreting the sanad, it would be permissible to use the words "framers of the sanad" instead of "the Legislature," and that the conclusion of Chamier, J. C., could then be applied en bloc, and I would carry this further and convey to the words "the nearest male heir" the meaning which would have been attached to those words in 1860 by an English lawyer. Although no rule of succession is laid down in the sanad, it would be very easy to frame such a rule if the words "nearest male heir" are interpreted as they would have been interpreted by an English lawyer in 1860, and the rule of lineal primogeniture is applied. The words "nearest male heir" are not words ordinarily used in English conveyancing, but would have a distinct meaning to an English lawyer. I do not consider that these words were used in the sanad loosely or carelessly. I take it that they were inserted under legal advice which, as I explained earlier in the judgment, must have been the advice of a lawyer conversant with English Law who would use the expressions of English Law to bear the meaning that they had in English Law, and that the framers had a distinct meaning which they intended to give to the words. I have not been shown any case in which the English Courts of Law had had to interpret the meaning of the words "nearest male heir." But I have been shown cases in which they had had to interpret words of a similar nature. The first of these cases is the case of Oddie v. Woodford (8), which was decided in 1825 and is reported in English Reports. In that case, it was held that the designation of eldest male lineal descendant was inapplicable to a male person claiming in part through a female. In a subsequent case, Bernal v. Bernal (9), which was decided in 1838 and is reported at page 1042 of English Reports, the Lord Chancellor stated at page 1049: "It must be considered, for the purpose of ascertaining who are to take, in the nature of an inheritance; the qualification to take being derived from the parties' descent; and that qualification is being male descendants. The general class is descendants; the qualification of the class is being male. To entitle any one to claim, he must show that he is one of the favoured class; that is, one of the class of male descendants. A male, descended from a female of the family, would undoubtedly answer the description, as he would be a descendant and a male; but he would not be one of the class of male descendants."

"Such would be the ordinary acceptance of the terms. In speaking of a man and his male descendants, as a class, no one would conceive the son of a female descendant as included; and such is the construction which our law has put upon the words; as 'issue male,' which is, in fact, the same thing as male descendants."

GHULAM ABBAS KHAN v. BIRI UMMATUL-PATIMA.

"The case of Oddie v. Woodford (8) appears to me to be a strong authority for the same purpose; for although the word 'lineal' was much relied upon, the force of that word was to mark the class to which the party was to belong, in contradistinction to the particular description of the individual. In no other sense, could the term 'lineal' be of any importance, as the party must have been lineally descended, whether descended through a male or a female; but considering the word 'lineal' as indicating the class, and, therefore, as meaning a descendant of the male line rather than a male descendant, the House of Lords held the grandson of the testator's second son (being the son of a daughter of the testator's second son) not to be entitled. In this case, it is clear that the testator is speaking of and describing a class; which brings it directly within the principle of Oddie v. Woodford (8).

"It appears to me, therefore, that the testator intended to designate the male line, as the class out of which the parties to be benefited were to be taken, and that such is the natural meaning of the terms used, explained by the other parts of the Will; and such an intention appears to coincide with the views and natural object of the testator. If instead of providing for the male line of the family, he had intended to provide for all the descendants of the persons named, why should he have selected sons of females as objects of his bounty, and have excluded the mothers of such sons and all other females? It would have been more natural to have provided for the unmarried females of the family of Bernal than for the sons of those females who might marry, and who would, therefore, properly belong to the families into which their mothers might have married."

The third case is that of Lynwood v. Kimber (10), which is reported in English Reports. The Master of the Rolls states at page 540: "I have looked through this Will in order to see if it contained anything to support the argument that the technical words 'issue male' are to be restricted by the general scope and object of the Will. I am satisfied that there is nothing of that sort, and that these words must be construed in their strict technical sense, which means issue male claiming through males. I should be unsettling the settled rules of the Court if I gave any other meaning to these words, unless I found on the face of the Will something to show that he intended to use them in another sense."

This case was decided in 1860. The learned Counsel for the appellants has argued that the above decisions are not instructive as they are concerned with the interpretation of testamentary dispositions coming before the English Courts. I cannot see that this circumstance deprives the decisions of value as a guide to me in the present case. Whether a disposition be a testamentary disposition or it be contained in the terms of a grant from the English Crown prepared in English and drafted under legal advice, the rules of interpretation would, in my opinion, be identical for all practical purposes, and the meanings that the highest Judges of the English Courts in 1860 and at periods prior to that year attached to words and the principles which guided them in interpreting them are, in my opinion, of the greatest possible assistance in a case of this nature. There is undoubtedly some difficulty, owing to the fact that no decision interprets the words "nearest heir male" and there is a considerable distinction between a male descendant or an issue male and an heir male. The necessity for the use of the words "male heir" in the sanad is fairly obvious. If the words "issue male" had been used, collaterals would have been excluded. It was evidently intended not to exclude collaterals. But in the case of Bernal v. Bernal (9), the Lord Chancellor has, in his weighty remarks with regard to the interpretation of the Will, given an indication which appears to me to be of the highest value in interpreting the terms of the sanad. If his decision is paraphrased to apply to the circumstances of this case, I can see that it might fairly be read as follows:—

"It must be considered, for the purpose of ascertaining who are to take, in the nature of an inheritance; the qualification (10) 54 E. R. 539; 29 Beav. 38; 30 L. J. Ch. 507; 7 Jur. (N. S.) 507; 9 W. R. 86; 131 E. R. 457.

GHULAM ABBAS KHAN V. BIBI UMMATUL-FATIMA.

to take being derived from the parties' descent: and that qualification is being male heirs. The general class is heirs; the qualification of the class is being male. To entitle any one to claim, he must show that he is one of the favoured class; that is, one of the class of male heirs. A male, descended from a female of the family, would not necessarily answer the description as, though a male, he need not be an heir. Such would be the ordinary acceptance of the terms.

"It appears to me, therefore, that the grantor intended to designate the male line as the class out of which the parties to be benefited were to be taken, and that such is the natural meaning of the terms used, explained by the other parts of the Will; and such an intention appears to coincide with the views and natural object of the grantor."

The next portion of the Lord Chancellor's judgment appears to have peculiar application. It may be paraphrased:

"If instead of providing for the male heirs of the grantee, the grantor had intended to provide for all his descendants excluding females, why should he have selected the sons of females as the objects of his bounty, and have excluded the mothers of such sons and all other females? It would have been more natural to have provided for the unmarried females of the family of the grantee than for the sons of those females who might marry, and who would, therefore, properly belong to the families into which their mothers might have married."

I admit that the question is one of the greatest difficulty, and I do not approach its decision in a confident spirit. It is not easy to interpret the meaning of the drafter of a grant in 1860 when he was using words which were not usually used in English conveyances, but they nevertheless, are sufficiently similar to the words used in English conveyances to justify an attempt to interpret them by analogy. I am of opinion, after lengthy consideration of the point, that the words "nearest heir male" can only include those male persons who claim through males and not those male persons who claim through females.

There must have been some object in the mind of the grantor when he deliberately excluded the ladies of the family from inheritance. It can hardly be suggested that in arriving at this decision, he was affected by the apprehension that owing to their sex, they would be incapable of managing their estates, for such an apprehension would be of less weight after the restoration of the British rule in Oudh, and could never have been of great weight in view of the fact that prior to annexation, many ladies, and amongst them Bibi Sughra herself, had been the holders of taluqs. If they were competent to manage their taluqs before annexation, it would appear that they were competent to manage them afterwards. I am thus not inclined to suppose that any question of disability of sex occurred to the mind of the grantor. What, it appears to me, did occur to his mind was that it was necessary to retain the estate impartible in case of intestacy and further to retain it in the family of the grantee from generation to generation. If it were permitted to devolve upon a married woman, it would be lost to the family as it would pass to the family of her husband. The remarks of the Lord Chancellor in Becaul v. Becaul (9), as to the inconsistency involved in supposing that the testator was ready to exclude his own family stock from inheritance and nevertheless ready to admit to inheritance the families of their husbands, afford a singularly pertinent argument in favour of my view. To suppose that the grantor wished to exclude daughters and yet to admit daughters' sons to inheritance, involves a great inconsistency, and there is nothing in the terms of the grant which would justify its acceptance. To conclude this portion of the decision, I am of opinion that the meaning of the sanad with regard to succession, can be summarised as follows: In event of intestacy, the case of all relatives of legitimate descent would be considered, all females and those claiming through females would be excluded, and the succession would go to the surviving representative of the highest line how low soever, collaterals only being admitted in absence of the survival of descendants. Such a rule of succession would be unknown to any estate known to the Law of England, but it would follow necessarily from the words of the sanad itself.

GHULAM ABBAS KHAN v. BIBI UMMATUL FATIMA.

An argument was addressed to the Court to the effect that it could hardly be considered possible that the Crown intended to exclude daughters' sons from the succession as, if such had been their intention, many grants would have rapidly escheated to the Crown. This argument is of the nature of a plea ad-miseri-cordiam, and if the terms of the grant are sufficient to support the meaning that daughters' sons are excluded, as I find them to be, it could have no possible weight. But looking at the subsequent Legislation on the subject, it would have no weight upon the evidence of the intention of the Crown as shown in subsequent legal enactments. In the first place, the admitted exclusion of daughters is sufficiently drastic. Daughters are not excluded by either the Hindu or the Muhammadan Law. Yet it is admitted that they are excluded under the terms of the sanad. The exclusion of their sons, is a minor matter in comparison with their exclusion. They are descendants of the talukdar whereas their sons are primarily the descendants of the daughters' husbands who belong to another family. Further, in Act I of 1869 as unamended, daughters are absolutely excluded in the first ten clauses of section 22 and a daughter's son is only admitted if he falls under the peculiar heading of clause 4. In the amended Act, the position of daughters and the sons of daughters is somewhat worse. Thus, even if it were possible to attach any weight to sentimental considerations based upon a hypothetical intention not disclosed in the terms of the grant to preserve the property to the descendants of the talukdar, it would appear that the Legislature has subsequently shown a direct intention to place daughters and daughters' sons in a position inferior to that of any other descendants of the intestate.

Such being the view that I take, I determine that although the succession is regulated under the terms of the sanad, the appellants in neither appeal have title under its terms. It is not necessary to decide whether Ghulam Abbas Khan has a right preferential to Agha Muhammad Jafar. Such decision involves the supposition that each has a right, and I find that neither has a right under the terms of the sanad. I am further not called upon to decide who is entitled to succeed under the terms of the sanad, or whether the grant has in the circumstances escheated to the Crown. The appellants have no title under the terms of the sanad or under the provisions of the Shia Muhammadan Law. Under the provisions of the latter law, they are excluded by their mothers. As I find that they have no title to succeed, it is unnecessary to decide the points raised by the respondents as to limitation and champerty. The appeals fail and are dismissed. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondents.

KANHAIYA LAL, A. J. C.—The dispute in this case relates to the Maniarpur Estate, which originally belonged to Bachgoti Khanzadas, who became converts to Muhammadanism and adopted the Shia faith. The last holder of the estate at the time of the annexation was Bibi Sughra, the sole daughter of Basawan Khan. The Summary Settlement was made with her by the British Government, and a primogeniture sanad was granted to her sometime in 1862. She died on the 11th November 1865. The lists appended to Act I of 1869 had been prepared before her death, and she was entered as No. 228 in list No. I and as No. 100 in list No. II, when the said Act was passed. The delay, which attended the passing of Act I of 1869 owing to the dropping of the first Bill in consequence of some differences between the Government of India and Sir Charles Wingfield the then Chief Commissioner of Oudh who questioned the policy of giving an absolute power of alienation to the talukdars, led to the inclusion in many instances in the lists appended to that Act of the names of persons who had died before the Act came into force, and the effect was that, though the persons recorded in the lists, whether dead or alive, were declared to be talukdars for the purposes of the Act, yet their heirs and legatees were excluded from the operation of the Act by reason of the definitions of those terms given in the Act, as it stood at the time. In Muhammad Abdus-samid v. Qurbis Husain (11) and Thakur Shoo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that Act I of 1869 did not apply to the estates held by such heirs or legatees from before the date when the Act came into force. An attempt was made by U. P. Act III of 1910 to amend the definitions of the words "heirs" and "legatees," so as to include persons who got an estate by inheritance or bequest prior to the 12th January 1869, when Act I of 1869 came into force. But the Legislature in carrying out that amendment did not give retrospective operation to the amended definitions when the effect of the retrospective operation would have been to vest in or confer upon any person any right or title to any estate or any portion thereof or any interest therein, which was at the commencement of the amended Act vested in any other person, who would have been entitled to retain the same if the amended Act had not been passed. Section 20 of the amended Act accordingly provided that the right or title of such other person shall not be affected by anything contained in the amending sections, to which retrospective effect was assigned. The amendment aimed at remedying the difference which the entries of the names of dead men in the lists appended to Act I of 1869 made in the devolution of the estate, but it left all vested interests untouched.

Sughra Bibi left no husband or children surviving her. Her father had by another wife, named Musammam Batasa, four sons, Jafar Ali Khan, Hasan Ali Khan, Baqar Ali Khan and Akbar Ali Khan. Section 8, clause (2), read with section 10 of Act I of 1869, raises conclusive presumption that her estate was impartible and devolved by a family custom on a single heir. Jafar Ali Khan, the eldest son of Musammam Batasa, was, it is admitted, alive on the date of Bibi Sughra's death. The person who was entitled to succeed to the property of Bibi Sughra, according to the custom of the family, was in the circumstances Jafar Ali Khan. Sughra Bibi, however, bequeathed her entire property on the 29th June 1862 to her youngest step-brother, Akbar Ali Khan. He succeeded to the property and was alive on the date when Act I of 1869 was passed.

On the 2nd July 1869, Akbar Ali Khan made a gift of 39 villages, since consolidated into 31 villages, forming part of the Maniarpur Estate, to his wife, Bibi Ilahi Khanam, in lieu of her dower (Exhibit 87). On the 29th June 1871, he executed a Will, bequeathing the remainder of his estate to her (Exhibit 129). On the 15th July 1871, he died leaving a widow, Bibi Ilahi Khanam, six daughters, who are defendants Nos. 1 to 6 in these suits, and a nephew, Ghulam Husain Khan, the son of his elder brother, Hasan Ali Khan, surviving him. His brothers had died before. The name of Bibi Ilahi Khanam was entered in the revenue papers after his death. Bibi Ilahi Khanam made a gift of six villages, forming part of the Maniarpur Estate, in favour of her daughters on the 13th December 1877. She died on the 20th April 1899. A contest thereupon arose between her nephew Ghulam Husain Khan, son of Hasan Ali Khan, and her daughters for succession to the estate. The daughters took possession and succeeded in getting mutation effected in their favour. Ghulam Husain Khan then filed a suit against the daughters, claiming that the family had preserved Hindu customs and was governed by the Hindu Law, that Bibi Ilahi Khanam had a life-interest in the estate, and that by virtue of a family custom, daughters were excluded from inheritance. The daughters denied the existence of the alleged custom and pleaded that the estate was not governed by the Hindu Law. The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Saltanpur on the 13th June 1903 on the ground that Ghulam Husain Khan had failed to establish the custom set up by him. There was no appeal from that decision to this Court.

Akbar Ali Khan, the brother of Bibi Ilahi Khanam, then sued the daughters for the possession of the estate, claiming title under clause (6) of section 22 of Act I of 1869 in preference to the daughters. The Subordinate Judge, following the decision of this Court in Rae Jagatpal Singh v. Thakurain Balraj Kuar (3), held that Act I of 1869 applied to the estate of Bibi Ilahi Khanam and decreed the claim. The decision on which the learned Subordinate Judge relied was, however, subsequently set aside by their Lordships of the Privy GHULAM ABBAS KHAN V. BI I UMMATUL FATIMA.

Council in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Singh (2). This Court on appeal, therefore, set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. It held that on the death of Sughra Bibi, the person who would have succeeded to the estate under section 22, was her eldest brother, not the youngest, and that the person who would have succeeded Akbar Ali Khan was Ghulam Husain Khan, his elder brother's son, rather than his widow, thereby rendering Act I of 1859 inapplicable to the estate. An attempt was made during the hearing of that appeal to claim the estate under the sanad, but it was held that no relief could be granted under the sanad, because no such ground of title was asserted in the pleadings [Musammatal Ummatul Fatima v. Asghar Ali Khan (4).]

Musammatal Asghari and Musammatal Ruqaiya, two of the daughters of Bibi Ilahi Khanam, afterwards applied to the Revenue Court for a partition of their 2/6ths share. They were opposed by Musammatal Ummatul Fatima, the eldest daughter of Bibi Ilahi Khanam, who set up a right to the whole estate on the ground that she was entitled to it according to the rule of primogeniture laid down in the sanad. The Revenue Court referred the parties to the Civil Court. A suit was then filed by Musammatal Asghari and Musammatal Ruqaiya against their sisters, Musammatal Ummatul Fatima, Musammatal Batul, Musammatal Kaniz and Musammatal Haidri for a declaration of their right to obtain partition of their 2/6ths share. They pleaded that the property was governed by the Shia Law and that they were entitled to a 2/6ths share by inheritance from their mother. On behalf of Musammatal Ummatul Fatima, who set up the right of her eldest son to succeed to the estate as the eldest representative of the senior line, reliance was placed on the sanad by which females were excluded from the inheritance. The Counsel for the plaintiffs conceded that the estate was governed by the sanad, but contended that, as neither party was entitled under the sanad, the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed on their possessory title. The Court of first instance accepted that contention and gave the plaintiffs a decree on the strength of their possession, which was confirmed on appeal.

The present suit was then brought by Agha Muhammad Jafar, the eldest son of Musammatal Ummatul Fatima who is the eldest daughter of Bibi Ilahi Khanam, for possession of the estate and mesne profits, claiming the estate under the sanad as the eldest male member of the senior line. He joined with him the transferees of a portion of his interest as co-plaintiffs in the suit. Another suit was instituted by Ghulam Abbas Khan, son of Musammatal Batul, the second daughter of Bibi Ilahi Khanam, claiming that he was entitled to it according to the rule of primogeniture contained in the sanad, by reason of his being the eldest grandson of Bibi Ilahi Khanam. He joined with him Babu Bhan Pratab Sthi, the transferee of a portion of his interest, as a co-plaintiff in the suit. Musammatal Ummatul Fatima and Musammatal Batul naturally supported their respective sons and also claimed alternately a right to succeed to the estate under the Muhammadan Law. The contention of the other daughters was that either Act I of 1869 or the Muhammadan Law governed the estate, and that the daughters were entitled by custom to inherit the property of their mother. It was further pleaded that the sales effected by Gulam Abbas Khan and Agha Muhammad Jafar of their alleged shares in the estate were champertous and not legally enforceable, and that the six villages given by Bibi Ilahi Khanam to her daughters in her life time, should be exempted from the claim.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the estate had devolved on Akbar Ali Khan under a bequest made by Sughra Bibi before Act I of 1869 came into force and was not, therefore, governed by that Act, that Akbar Ali Khan gave 39 villages to his wife Bibi Ilahi Khanam, which were afterwards consolidated into 31 villages, and also bequeathed the rest of his estate to her, that Bibi Ilahi Khanam gave six villages in her life-time to her daughters in regard to which no suit was maintainable, and that the rule of succession given in the sanad applied to the estate so long as it was in the hands of Sughra Bibi, but did not apply to it after it had passed from her by alienation or bequest to another person. In other words, he held that the rule of devolution laid down in the sanad was intended to apply to cases of inheritance, but not to cases of transfers inter vivos or bequests where the effect of the transfer or bequest was to pass the property to a person who was not a talukdar or the immediate heir of a talukdar within the meaning of sections 14 and 15 of Act I of 1869. He, therefore, dismissed the claims of the plaintiffs and declared that the daughters of Bibi Ilahi Khanam were entitled to inherit such portion of the estate as Bibi Ilahi Khanam had not disposed of in her life-time, under the Muhammadan Law in preference to the plaintiffs.

It is not disputed in these appeals that six specific villages, forming part of the estate, were given by Bibi Ilahi Khanam in her life-time to her daughters. All that is contended is that the gift did not convey anything more than an under-proprietory right in the said villages, but the deed of gift (Exhibit A1) shows that the donor purported to convey all the rights she possessed in the property given without the reservation of any superior proprietary interest or of rent, with which an under-proprietor is ordinarily chargeable. It is clear, therefore, that the entire proprietary rights held by Bibi Ilahi Khanam, which were conveyed by the said gift, passed to her daughters, and that no suit by any of the plaintiffs in regard to the villages comprised in the deed of gift, is maintainable.

The dispute between the parties is mainly clustered round the remainder of the property and the first question raised during the hearing was, whether section 14 of Act I of 1869 brought the estate within the purview of the Act. Sughra Bibi was a talukdar, and had a right under the sanad to bequeath her estate to any one she liked. She bequeathed it to a person who was not in the prescribed line of succession or, in other words, was not a person to whom the estate would have descended according to the family custom or under Act I of 1869, had the testator died after that Act came into force. The scope of section 14 of Act I of 1869 is wide enough to cover transfers made by talukdars or grantees before that Act came into force, but as observed in Thakurin Balraj Kunwar v. Rae

Jagatpal Singh (2) the person referred to in that section, is the immediate person who would have been entitled to the estate under the Act, had the owner died intestate after the Act came into force without making any transfer.

It is contended that a person who would have succeeded to the estate had Sughra Bibi died after Act I of 1869 came into force was a person to whom a transfer or bequest would have carried the privileges conferred by section 14 of the Act. But the person to whom a transfer could have been made with the consequences referred to in that section, would vary according to the date on which the succession opened out owing to the death or survival of nearer relations, and it would be unreasonable to apply the rule of succession provided by the Act for determining that person, by assuming that the talukdar or grantee in question had died after the Act came into force, and not making a similar assumption in favour of other persons of the same class, who were alive on the date when the succession opened out. There is nothing in that section to indicate that the words "would have succeeded," were merely descriptive of a certain class falling within the specific clause of section 22, applicable to the case, because within each class, the right of the person entitled to succession, is determined by seniority and survival in the case of estates like the present, which are governed by the rule of descent on a single heir. According to section 15 of Act I of 1869, where an estate is transferred or bequeathed to a person who is neither a talukdar nor a grantee nor a person who would have succeeded to the estate under the Act had the transferor died intestate and without making a transfer, the rule of succession laid down in the Act, does not govern the transferee or legatee, whether the transfer or bequest was made before Act I of 1869 came into force or afterwards. Akbar Ali Khan was not, therefore, governed by Act I of 1869.

The next question is whether the devolution of his estate was governed by the sanad or by the Muhammadan Law. Section 3 of the Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895) provides that all provisions, restrictions, conditions and limitations, contained in any grant or other transfer of land or any interest therein, made by the Government before or after the Act came into force, shall be valid and take effect according to their tenor, any rule of law, Statute, or enactment of the Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding. In Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubs Kunwar (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council accordingly held that in cases where Act I of 1849 does not apply, the rule of descent laid down in the sanad supersedes the personal law of the grantee.

The sanad does not, however, explicitly say whether the rule of descent laid down in it, is equally applicable to persons to whom the estate or any portion of it may be transferred or bequeathed by the holder of the sanad or his heir in his life-time. It does not specify whether by the exclusion of females is meant the exclusion of every one of their line even when no paternal kinsmen are in existence; and it leaves further open whether among the male descendants of females, preference is to be adjudged by age or by the seniority of age and line, where they are of the same degree. Apart from usage, there is no such thing as a rule of primogeniture known to the Hindu or Muhammadan Law. According to the English rules of primogeniture governing the descent of estates in fee simple, males exclude females of equal degree, and in the absence of such males, females of equal degree inherit together as co-heiresses.

The sanad does not, therefore, follow or adopt any known or recognized system of law, and its interpretation must largely depend on the language used in the sanad itself, and such evidences of contemporaneous exposition as may be gathered from the official papers of the time.

The sanad granted to Sughra Bibi was in the form given at page 514 of Chhail Behari Lal's Talukdari Law of Oudh. It is divided into three paragraphs. The first paragraph, after referring to the confiscation of proprietary rights in the soil of Oudh by the Proclamation of March 1858 and the conferment of the full proprietary right, title and possession of the estate of Maniarpur, consisting of the villages specified in the list attached to the kobuliat, on Sughra Bibi, goes on to say:-

"Therefore, this sanad is given you in order that it may be known to all, whom it may concern, that the above estate Maniarpur has been conferred upon you and your heirs for ever, subject to the payment of such annual revenue as may from time to time be imposed, and to the conditions of surrendering all arms, destroying all forts preventing and reporting crime, rendering any service you may be called upon to perform, and of showing constant good faith, loyalty, zeal and attachment to the British Government, according to the provisions of the engagement which you have executed, the breach of any one of which at any time shall be held to annul the right and title now conferred on you and your heirs."

The second paragraph states:—"It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate or of any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, but you and all your successors shall have full power to alienate the estate, either in whole or in part, by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest or adoption to whomsoever you please."

The third paragraph declares:—"It is also a condition of this grant that you will, so far as is in your power, promote the agricultural prosperity of your estate, and that all holding under you shall be secured in the possession of all the subordinate rights they formerly enjoyed. As long as the above obligations are observed by you and your heirs in good faith, so long will the British Government maintain you and your heirs as proprietors of the above-mentioned estate, in confirmation of which I herewith attach my seal and signature."

It is noticeable that the word "heirs" occurs in the sanad in four different places, and has apparently been used to signify persons successively inheriting the estate under the sanad. In the second paragraph, however, in dealing with the question of intestate succession, the word "heir" is used once to denote the person entitled to succeed according to the rule of primogeniture, and the word "successors" is used in two different places in connection with the rule of descent and the right of alienation. The meaning of the word "successor" varies in different documents and Statutes according to the context, and, though it literally means "he that followeth or cometh in another's place," it is applied as much to successors by inheritance or operation of law as to successors by testamentary disposition, voluntary alienation or change of incumbents. If a word is capable of a restricted as well as an extended meaning, the principle of interpretation is to assign to it the meaning which the context warrants. The paragraph in which the word occurs, begins with a reference to intestate succession and is followed by the laying down of a rule to govern that succession, with an antithetical clause indicating that the rule of succession therein laid down shall not prevent the grantee and his or her successors from alienating the estate forming the subject of the grant. If the rule of descent laid down in the sanad be held to apply to all transferees, it is obvious that it should apply to vendees, mortgagees, donees, legatees and adopted sons alike. To apply the rule of descent to legatees and adopted sons, where adoption is not recognised by the personal or customary law, and to exclude vendees, mortgagees and donees from its application, would not be consistent, for all these classes of persons are dealt with in one and the same clause and treated as transferees. The reasonable inference from the context is that the word "successors" is used in connection with the rule of descent to denote successive heirs or persons succeeding to the intestate or undisposed of residue, rather than persons in whose favour a transfer or bequest might be made by the owner in his life-time.

A change in the language is generally due either to the exigencies of style or to a desire to restrict or widen the significance. Adverting to the rule that if the meaning of a word cannot be ascertained from a section itself, its meaning can be ascertained from the use of that word in other parts of the Act, Maxwell says:—"But just as the presumption that the same meaning is intended for the same expression in every part of an Act is, as we have seen, not of much weight, so the presumption of a change of intention from a change of language (of no great weight in the construction of any documents) seems entitled to less weight in the construction of a Statute than in any other case; for the variation is sometimes to be accounted for by a mere desire of improving the graces of style, and of avoiding the repeated use of the same words, and often from the circumstance that the Act has been compiled from different sources; and further, from the alterations and additions from various hands which the Acts undergo in their progress through Parliament"—(Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 4th edition, page 482)*. What applies to Acts, applies with equal force to documents written by less skilful hands, specially where, as I shall show hereafter, additions are made to such documents from time to time. It is probable that the word "successors" was then considered more appropriate to signify successive heirs than the word "heirs" itself, which would not have included an adopted son, where adoption was not recognised by the personal or customary law. It is true that the sanad makes the rule of descent laid down therein a condition of the grant, but it is a condition of the grant only to the extent therein specified. What it practically declares is:—"In the event of you or any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, but you and all your successors shall have full power to take the estate out of the rule by alienating it either in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest or adoption to whomsoever you like." The juxtaposition of the two clauses shows that what follows, limits, restricts or qualifies the preceding. Had the intention been otherwise, one would have expected the sanad to say so unequivocally or at least to put it in such a form as to indicate unmistakeably that the grantee and his successors would have full power to alienate the estate in whole or in the part, but it was a condition of the grant that in the event of the grantee or any of his successors or assigns dying intestate, the estate would descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture. A previous reference to the transfers might possibly have indicated the kind of successor intended or referred to in the clause which followed. As it now stands, the rule of descent is qualified by the conditions under which the estate may go out of the rule. It is suggested that the object of adding the clause about the alienation was to obviate an impression that the sanad intended to grant an estate tail male, but no estate tail male can be created unless a body is specified. The object of introducing the rule of primogeniture was to prevent the disintegration of the estate by partition, but the framers of the sanad must have foreseen its disintegration when they provided for its voluntary alienation by means of sale, mortgage, gift or bequest, and it can hardly be supposed that they intended to make the rule of primogeniture applicable to every portion to split out of the estate; for partition, though involuntary, if burdened with such a rule, could not have made much greater difference. Any other interpretation would make the rule of primogeniture applicable to every plot of land which a talukdar or grantee may transfer or bequeath for building a shop or house to any shop-keeper or resident of the village, whose other property would be governed by the ordinary law. In cases of mortgage, the equity of redemption forms part of the undisposed of residue, and would naturally be governed by the rule of primogeniture, but it is hardly likely that the intention was that ephemeral rights like those of a mortgagee should be governed by the rule any more than the rights acquired by lessees under leases granted by the holder of the sanad for fixed periods or in perpetuity.

The history of the conditions and circumstances under which the rule of primogeniture was introduced into the sanad, also bears out the above interpretation.

In the case of ancient documents, evidence is admissible as to the interpretation placed upon them by persons who lived at or about a time not remote from the time of the execution of the document. Commenting on this rule, Norton observes:—

"The longer the period that elapses between the time of executing and the time of interpreting a document, the greater is the difficulty in obtaining direct evidence as to the meaning of the words employed; and if the document is very ancient, the difficulty becomes insuperable. When this is the case, the meaning of the words can sometimes be arrived at with a fair degree of certainty by ascertaining what was the interpretation placed on the document immediately after its execution. The probability is great that at the time there were some persons whose interest it was to insist upon the document being properly interpreted, and the fact that a particular interpretation was then placed on it, affords a great probability of the correctness of such particular interpretation; and this probability is increased, if it is found that during a long course of years such interpretation has been acquiesced in."—(Norton on Deeds, p. 140). The rule applies with greater force to the exposition of old grants, containing general words capable of more than one interpretation made by the author of the grant at or about the time when the grant was made, for there can be no better exponent of a grant than the grantor himself. In Gulabdas Jugjivandas v. Collector of Surat (12), their Lordships of the Privy Council, in construing a grant made by the then Governor of Bombay to a person who held an office before under the Nawab of Surat, observed that the construction might be aided by a consideration of the minute then issued by the Governor of Bombay, and the surrounding circumstances under which and the occasion in connection with which the grant was made. In Raghojirao Saheb v. Laksmanrao Saheb (7), where certain words used in a grant were capable of a restricted and an extended interpretation, their Lordships of the Privy Council went into the entire history of the family and the official documents relating to the grant to ascertain its true meaning on the principle of contemporanea expositio as a guide to its interpretation. In Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Haghubans Kumkar (1) Sir Arthur Wilson, who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee, similarly referred to the history of the grant and the correspondence showing the development of the policy of the Government in connection with different talukas to ascertain whether the rule of descent laid down in the sanad was applicable to the estate in supersession of the ordinary law.

(12) 3 B. 186 (P. C.), 6 I. A. 54.

A careful study of the correspondence between Lord Canning, the author of the grant, and Sir Charles Wingfield, the then Chief Commissioner of Oudh, relating to the desirability of introducing the rule of primogeniture in the sanads which has been summarized by Mr. Sykes in his introduction to the Compendium of the Oudh Talukdari Law, pages 80 to 109, discloses an unmistakable clue as to what Lord Canning actually intended, when he permitted the clause relating to primogeniture to be added to the sanads. The rights recognized by the sanads were those determined in the Summary Settlement of 1858-59, and the sanads as originally issued did not contain any rule of descent in regard to the estate. On the completion of the Summary Settlement, the Government of India intimated to the Chief Commissioner of Oudh their decision to maintain the talukdars in possession of the talukas for which they had been permitted to engage, and directed the Chief Commissioner to issue sanads under their authority, giving them a permanent, heritable and transferable proprietary right.—(Vide the letter dated the 10th October 1859, appended to Act I of 1869).

The Chief Commissioner prepared a form of sanad, and sent it to the Government of India for approval on the 15th October 1859. The Government of India made a few verbal alterations in the draft and sent the revised form with their letter, dated the 19th October 1859, to the Chief Commissioner of Oudh for adoption.—(Vide the letter of that date appended to Act I of 1869 and printed with the revised form of sanad at page 32 of the Oudh Papers for 1861 and Syke's Compendium, Appendix E.)

On the 26th October 1859, a darbar was held by Lord Canning at Lucknow, which was attended by about one hundred and fifty talukdars, to each of whom a sanad was granted in the form approved without any reference to the rule of primogeniture.

On the 11th October 1859, the Chief Commissioner had meanwhile issued a circular, calling upon the Commissioners of Divisions to furnish a list "of the talukas in which the law of primogeniture prevailed in opposition to the Hindu Law of succession, such as are known as having a gaddi, and resemble the magnates of continental Europe." On the 18th January 1860, the Government of India called for a copy of the said circular and the correspondence which had taken place between the Commissioner of Lucknow and the Chief Commissioner in connection with it. In forwarding the copies of that correspondence, the Chief Commissioner opened a discussion with the Government of India on the rule of succession in talukas, observing that in about 30 families, succession was regulated by the rule of primogeniture, but in the greater number of talukas, the rule of primogeniture was not in force, and recommending that in order to prevent a sub-division of their estate into a multitude of petty holdings by impoverished proprietors, it might be made a condition of the gift of each estate that the property shall not be subject to sub-division (Oudh Papers for 1861, page 47). On the 10th March 1860, the Government of India, in replying to what the Chief Commissioner had proposed, said—

"As respects the law of primogeniture, I am directed to observe that the condition which you propose to insert in the sanads which remain to be conferred, is much too stringent. It would limit the power of the talukdar over his estate to a degree which is not consistent with the promise of the Governor-General that his right shall be hereditary and transferable. It would also have the evil effect of a law of entail in leading to the retention of large estates by an impoverished proprietor, in the not unfrequent case of long continued extravagance and wastefulness. The Governor-General has no doubt that each talukdar ought to be left free to dispose of his estate in whole or in part as he pleases, either by sale, gift, or bequest. But when a talukdar dies intestate, his Excellency agrees with you in thinking it desirable that the estate should devolve on the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, applicable at present to estates having a gaddi." The Government of India agreed to a primogeniture sanad being granted to persons who were willing to surrender the old sanads, and went on to say—

"The Governor-General recognises the advantage of encouraging the inheritance of landed estates by primogeniture, or, at least, the transmission of them undivided to one heir; but the most that can be done towards bringing this about, will be to make it a condition with those to whom sanads have not yet been granted, that if they die without having disposed of the succession to their estates, that succession shall follow the rule observed in the families which have a gaddi in Oudh, and not the rule of partition. The first of these rules, though not the one most prevalent in the Province, is certainly well understood there."—(Ibid., pages 49 and 50.)

The Governor-General obviously meant that the succession was to be governed by the rule of primogeniture or the descent of property undivided to a single heir, if the grantee had not already "disposed of the succession" to his estate in his life-time, and though the Chief Commissioner in his subsequent letters reiterated that the gaddi or law of primogeniture should be declared by the Governor-General to be the rule of succession to all considerable landed estates in Oudh, the Governor-General adhered to the view he had originally expressed and in his letter of the 17th July 1860 wrote as follows:—"The Governor-General agreed with the Chief Commissioner in thinking it desirable that all talukas should devolve on the nearest male heir, according to the rule of primogeniture at present applicable to estates having a gaddi.....

But the Governor-General in Council will not consent to limit the absolute power over his estate, which has been guaranteed to every talukdar in Oudh, and is convinced that the existence of such a power is just as essential to the prosperity of the Province and to the maintenance of a landed aristocracy on a sound footing as the extension of the rule of primogeniture in cases of intestacy. As, on the one hand, it will be in the power of every talukdar to refrain from making a Will and so to allow his estate to devolve undivided on his nearest heir, or, if childless, to adopt a son who will inherit the whole of his estate, or to bequeath it by Will to any one person whom he may wish to designate as his successor, so, on the other hand, it is right that he should be at liberty to bequeath his estate to more than one person, in accordance with Hindu or Muhammadan Law; or otherwise, as may suit his pleasure. Though the present holder of a taluqa may be in favour of the rule of primogeniture, his successor may be of a different opinion: and His Excellency in Council would not deprive taluqdars in all future generations, of the power of bequeathing their estates in accordance with their own views. To deny them this power, would be in effect to establish a strict entail so far as bequests are concerned, and would operate at least as injuriously in one direction as the existing rule of partition does in another. If opinion among the talukdars is in favour of primogeniture and the maintenance of their estates undivided in the hands of one member of the family, partition will be rare. Partition by bequest will be especially rare, for Wills are said to be at present unknown in Oudh, and natives general are supposed to be averse to them; and to partition by sale, mortgage or gift, the Chief Commissioner himself is not averse." In conclusion, the Governor-General authorised the Chief Commissioner to issue new sanads declaring in addition to the conditions already sanctioned by the Governor-General that the estate in case of intestacy shall descend to the nearest male heir, and adding by way of a proviso that the talukdar has full power to alienate his estate either in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest or adoption to whomsoever he pleases.

In regard to the talukdars in whose family the rule of primogeniture prevailed from before, His Excellency pointed out that there was no necessity for calling upon them to declare in formal terms whether they were desirous that the rule of primogeniture should be applicable to their estates or not, because their estates would pass in case of intestacy as before, but any talukdar of that class might be permitted to give up his sanad and to receive in lieu thereof another in which the rule of primogeniture shall be expressly recognized as applicable to his estate and family, and in which it shall be declared that the title conferred on him by the Governor-General included a full right to dispose of his estate as he pleased during his life-time and by bequest or adoption at his death. (Ibid., pages 65 to 67).

A rule of descent was added in the sanad in accordance with the above direction, and fresh sanads, containing the new clause, were issued to a large number of talukdars who expressed their wish to the adoption of the rule. The letter of the Government of India permitting the addition of the clause sufficiently indicates that the rule was only to be applied, if the holder of the sanad had not disposed of his estate by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest or adoption, for it recognised that "though the present holder of a taluk may be in favour of the rule of primogeniture, his successor may be of a different opinion." In reviewing the Oudh Administration Report for 1860-61, the Governor-General in Council, referring to the new sanads issued under their authority, recounted what they had done and observed:—"His Excellency the Governor-General in Council has during the year passed final orders on the question of making primogeniture the rule of succession in great talukdari families. His Excellency has refused to restrict in the smallest degree the power of talukdars to dispose of their estates during their life-time, or bequeath them by Will at their death, in any way and to whomsoever they please. This right was guaranteed by the terms of the sanad granted at the darbar held by His Excellency at Lucknow in 1859, at which the settlement made with the talukdars was declared final and perpetual. His Excellency, however, expressed his opinion that whenever a talukdar died intestate, it would be advisable if his estate devolved entirely to one heir, instead of being subjected to division amongst several. He, therefore, authorised the insertion of a fresh clause in the sanads granted to those talukdars in whose families the raj or gaddi had not hitherto existed, and who expressed their desire to adopt such a rule, making it a condition of the grant by Government that the estate should, in the event of the intestacy of the talukdar or any of his descendants, be subject to the rule of primogeniture. These instructions have been carried out, the wishes of the several talukdars have been ascertained, and fresh sanads, containing the new clause, have been issued whenever necessary." (Ibid. for 1865, page 34).

On behalf of one of the plaintiffs-appellants, reliance is placed on a Bill introduced by Lord Canning on the 12th March 1862 to regulate the succession to and the rights in respect of certain *taluk*s and granted estates in Oudh, clause 2 of which provided:—

"Any person to whom any such talukdar or grantor shall, before the passing of the Act, have transferred or bequeathed, or shall hereafter transfer or bequeath, any interest in the whole or in any part of any taluk or granted estate in manner aforesaid, and his heirs, successors, and assigns shall have the same rights and powers in regard to the transfer or bequest of the interest to which he shall have succeeded, or to which he shall succeed under such transfer or bequest, and shall hold the same subject to the same rules of succession as the original talukdar or grantee, subject, however, to the express terms and conditions of such transfer or bequest." (Oudh Papers for 1865, page 86).

Lord Canning in introducing that Bill observed that it only declared the principle more formally upon which the grants were based and provided in detail for the manner in which the rule of primogeniture was to take effect (Ibid., page 91). But a reference to the Bill shows that clause (2) gave power to the holder of the sanad or grantee to vary the rule of succession laid down in the grant by the express terms and conditions of his transfer or bequest, and clause (4), which described the rule of descent according to the law of primogeniture, was declared to be applicable only to cases in which the holder of the sanad had died without having transferred or bequeathed his estate. It is significant that before the Bill was introduced, the question of succession according to the rule of primogeniture was considered by the Secretary of State, Sir Charles Wood, who had meanwhile an opportunity of discussing the matter personally with Sir Charles Wingfield. He communicated his views to Lord Canning by a despatch dated the 17th August 1861. The Secretary of State, after referring to the difference of opinion which appeared to have arisen between the Chief Commissioner and the Government of India, observed that he was unable to perceive why His Excellency's Government desired to give the talukdars a more absolute control over their estates than would have been the case if they had inherited them from their ancestors, and pointed out that this latitude of disposal, against which the Chief Commissioner had respectfully protested, might prove an obstacle to the accomplishment of the object which His Excellency must desire to realise, namely, the preservation of property in the hands of the lineal representatives of the great families of Oudh.—(Oudh Papers for 1861, page 150). How far that despatch affected the policy of Lord Canning in framing the details which he embodied in his Bill, it is difficult to say, but it is obvious that the same weight cannot be attached to the Bill as a contemporaneous exposition of the intentions of the author of the grant as the correspondence preceding the grant, to which reference has already been made. Lord Canning admitted in his speech on the Bill that in working out the details, the aim was to combine the principle of primogeniture with other principles and usages traditional in this country and dear to the people.—(Oudh Papers, for 1865, page 92). The Bill was dropped after Lord Canning left India, and in the amended Bill which subsequently became law, it was expressly provided that the rule of succession laid down in the Act was not to be applied, if the transfer or bequest was made by a talukdar or grantee or his heir or legatee to a person who would not have succeeded according to the provisions of that Act if the transferor or testator had died intestate, without having made the transfer or bequest. The talukdars desired that sections 14 and 15 should be omitted from the Act, but Mr. Strachey pointed out that that was not a question falling within the engagements of Lord Canning. Those engagements, he observed, "were made for special political purposes, and they were intended to give certain exceptional privileges to certain selected individuals; not only did Lord Canning not desire, but it would have been contrary to his policy to make these privileges separable from the families of the talukdars themselves. If these sections had been omitted and a talukdar to whose family the rule of primogeniture was applicable, had sold a patch of land to a shop-keeper, the succession to that field would have been forever governed by the rule of primogeniture, though the succession to all the rest of the owner's landed and other property would be governed by a different rule" (Sykes' Compendium, page 261). Mr. Strachey averred that his Bill differed in no essential particular from that which had been introduced by Lord Canning in 1862. But whether that was so or not, it is obvious that the rule of primogeniture was never intended to be applied at the time, when the sanads were granted, to persons to whom the estate might be alienated in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift or bequest, and the provision that it should be applied to persons of that class if they answered a certain description, was not introduced until Act I of 1869 came into force. The Act does not, however, apply in this case to the estate held by Akbar Ali Khan or his widow, Bibi Ilahi Khanam, in whose favour alienations had been effected in pursuance of the power derived from the sanad. The rule of descent laid down in the sanad also does not apply, because the intestate succession referred to in that rule, implies succession to the intestate or undisposed of residue, and the word "successors" contemplates persons who had succeeded on death to the intestate or undisposed of remainder. In the hands of Akbar Ali Khan and Bibi Ilahi Khanam, the estate was, therefore, governed by the Muhammadan Law, and the plaintiffs, as the sons of the daughters of Bibi Ilahi Khanam, are not entitled to the estate in preference to the daughters.

It is unnecessary under the circumstances to consider the other points raised at the hearing, but in consideration of the view taken by my learned colleague, which, if adopted, would necessitate the determination of the other points involved in the case, I would indicate briefly the principles which, to my mind, should guide the decision of the rights of the rival parties according to the rule of primogeniture.

GHULAM ABBAS KHAN v. BIBI UMMAATUL FATIMA.

Where a person has died leaving several daughters, who are excluded by inheritance by reason of their sex under the terms of the grant, and each of these daughters has several male issues, the seniority is determined by the age of the claimants representing the senior line. In Debi Baksh Singh v. Chandabhan Singh (5), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the rule of primogeniture, referred to in the sanad, was the rule of lineal primogeniture, but the adoption of the rule of lineal primogeniture did not imply the adoption of the English Law of real property. The entire correspondence reproduced in the Oudh Papers between Lord Canning and the Chief Commissioner of Oudh reveals that the rules of primogeniture and gaddi-nashini were treated loosely in those days as convertible terms. The rule of gaddi-nashini did not, however, conflict in any way with the rule of lineal primogeniture, for, as shown by Act I of 1869, lineal descendants had in any case the preference. There are references in the Oudh Papers in some places to the exclusion of females under the gaddi-nashini rule, but whether that theory was true or not, the limitation that the estate was to descend on the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, probably owes its origin to that idea.

Where a person has left daughters, but no sons, and no paternal relations, the exclusion of daughters by reason of their sex would not necessarily indicate the exclusion of their lines. The disability attaches to the sex, and not to the line, and among sons by different daughters, the preference is determined by the seniority of the line and the age of persons representing the senior line.

The plaintiff, Ghulam Abbas Khan, is not, therefore, entitled to the estate, even if the rule of descent laid down in the sanad be applied because, though he is older in age than Agha Muhammad Jafar, he does not represent the senior line. There is no question of age where the persons claiming an estate are not of the same line. The word "eldest" implies eldest in the order of primogeniture, not eldest in personal age—Thellusson v. Rendlesham (13) and (14) 11 Eng. Rep. 172; 7 H. L. Cas. 429; 25 L. J. Q. 948; 5 Jur. (N. S.) 1031; 7 W. R. 563; 115 R. R. 229.

1010 v. Strickland (14). As Mr. Justice Cranston pointed out: "Taking hold of a particular word and giving it the meaning which it most often bears will lead into great mistakes, if we do not remember that the rule must refer to the meaning it bears with reference to the subject-matter. Construing 'eldest' in a disposition like the present, in the sense of oldest in years inter se, appears to me to resemble the observation of the clown in the old play, who, in answer to the enquiry, 'Which is the Queen's high constable?' replies, 'Why the tallest man, to be sure,' and numerous illustrations might be given of the use of epithets generally bearing a particular meaning, which in reference to another subject have always what may be called in one sense, a secondary or derivative meaning, but which, when applied to a particular subject-matter, can only be understood in such secondary or derivative sense".—Thellusson v. Rendlesham (13). When sex is preferred priority of line is not to be disregarded—Strickland v. Apap (15). Agha Muhammad Jafar is the eldest son of the eldest daughter of Akbar Ali Khan and Bibi Ilahi Khanam, and, though his mother was excluded from inheritance by the rule of descent laid down in the sanad, no disability to inherit the estate attaches to him.

A daughter, being excluded from succession by a sanad, her sons would be the nearest heirs to the estate of their maternal grandmother under the Shia Law, and if the rule of descent laid down in the sanad be held to apply, a selection would have to be made from among them of the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture. A daughter, who is excluded from inheritance, is not necessarily disqualified from transmitting blood, and the rule contained in the sanad, excluding females, cannot be read as implying an exclusion of every male of their line. An excluded heir is not in a worse position than a disqualified heir under the personal law, and an impediment which attaches to a person by reason of her sex, would not necessarily attach to one born of her if he did not belong to that sex and was otherwise qualified. The diversion of property to persons belonging to the daughters' line is not worse than its diversion by alienation, and if alienation was permitted, there is no ground for thinking that the entire line of females was intended to be excluded. A clause which disqualifies or disinherits persons otherwise entitled requires to be interpreted very strictly, and though the question is not free from difficulty, an interpretation which does not harmonise with equity and reason and favours escheat or forfeiture in the presence of an heir of the required sex recognized by the personal law ought not to be accepted. The rule of primogeniture determines the right to inherit with reference to the line and also priority where the claimants are persons of equal degree. The sanad controls the personal law but is not controlled by it, and the declaration and condition of the sanad, being part of the original title to the property, is, as pointed out by Lord Shaw in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (5), an essential part of the regulation of the ordinary law of the religion and tribe.

The appeals, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondents.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Saving of limitation—Payment of interest—Proof necessary—Debiting interest in account book, if sufficient—Payment in reduction of debt, if saves limitation.

To avoid the bar of limitation in a suit for the recovery of money due on a mortgage-deed, a plaintiff must establish, not only that there was payment within 12 years prior to the date of the institution of the suit, but also that there was either an express intimation by the debtor, or proof of the existence of circumstances going to show, that the payment was on account of the interest on the particular debt sued on. [p. 782, col. 2.]

In the absence of express agreement, debiting to interest in the books of account, cannot be regarded as payment of interest. [p. 783, col. 1.]

Payments made by the debtor in reduction of the general balance of account against him, but without intimating that any of such payments was to be appropriated in satisfaction of the interest due on his debt, do not amount to a payment of interest as such to save the bar of limitation. JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for the recovery of a sum of money upon a mortgage-deed executed on the 30th of October 1895, and the sole question for determination is whether the suit is or is not barred by time. It is not disputed that the cause of action arose in January 1896, when there was a default in payment of interest for three successive months and the action which was brought on the 16th June 1911, is prima facie barred by limitation. The sole ground upon which the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs seeks to bring it within time, is that the mortgagor paid interest within the purview of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act, and that a fresh period of limitation began to run from the date of such payment.

Now it is a well-recognised proposition of law that a plaintiff must establish not only that there was payment within 12 years prior to the date of the institution of the suit, but also that there was either an express intimation by the debtor, or proof of the existence of circumstances going to show, that the payment was on account of the interest on the particular debt sued on. In the present case, the accounts between the parties have been examined by the lower Courts and we agree with the learned Divisional Judge that the plaintiffs have failed to prove the payment of interest within the meaning of section 20. It appears that in the books of the plaintiffs, there is a general account of the defendants in which the items due on the mortgage and also those relating to other transactions were debited to them. Periodically, there were book debits on account of interest which, we observe, was not paid in cash. It further appears that certain sums of money were paid by the debtors at different dates and that the plaintiffs gave them credit therefor in the general account.

Upon these facts, we are quite clear that the mere debiting of interest in the books cannot be regarded as payment of interest [vide inter alia Kollipara Pullamma v. Maddula Tatayya (1) and Dharam Das v. Ganga Devi (2)]. Further, payments made by the debtor in reduction of the general balance of account against him, but without intimating that any of such payments was to be appropriated in satisfaction of the interest due on his debt, do not amount to a payment of interest as such to save the bar of limitation [see Hanmantlal Motichand v. Ramabai (3), Surju Prasad Singh v. Khawarish Ali (4), and Maheswar Pundia v. Baidya Nath Jana (5)].

For the aforesaid reasons, we uphold the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—This was an action brought by a Chetty agent carrying on business on behalf of his principal in Lower Burma for something which may be described as commission. The circumstance in which this agent was appointed is in a document, dated 20th January 1907, which is what I understand to be an ordinary form of agreement between a Chetty agent and principal. He was to go to a place called Letpatam and transact business as the agent of his firm in that place for a period of three years for a fixed salary of Rs. 8,000. He was to remain there and transact business for a period of three years and hand over the balance of capital and profits left in his hands to his successor. These were the terms of the document. It would appear that in fact the principal's business in that place had been faring very ill for a few years previously, apparently because of the incapacity of the preceding agent, and it may very well be that the principal's mind was (as he swore) that he doubted his ability to enable the new agent to embark, at any rate with rapidity, on new transactions and always had in his mind that his duty would be to collect the outstandings left uncollected by his predecessor, if he could be got to do so—I say advisedly “if he could be got to do so,” because there is evidence in this case of the principal's agent at Rangoon who says: "It is the custom among Nattukottai Chettiars to transfer to the name of the successor such outstandings as he is agreeable to". The agent has said in the box and on paper contemporaneously over and over again that he went out with the expectation of doing ordinary money-lending business as a Chetty agent, which is quite evident from a letter dated 6th June 1907, which is the first letter that was written to the defendant by the agent in which he says: "You said you would keep Rs. 25,000 as capital for the place, but you have not as yet written about it even though I wrote a letter from this place. Therefore, you must write to this place to enter that sum in the accounts and send Rs. 75,000 over that amount so as to make the capital one lakh of rupees." What was that capital wanted for? Not to collect old debts, but for the purpose of doing business with new clients. In that letter, he also says: "We must have dealings with good persons who may be coming voluntarily at a cheap rate of interest and in small sums. We must also be carefully collecting the old dues." The next document is dated 3rd August 1907. It is from the principal to the agent in which he presses him to collect the old dues to the prejudice of other business. It is in effect an exhortation to the agent to get on as fast as he could with the collection of the sums due under old accounts.

The next letter is Exhibit IX, which is a very important letter, dated 17th June 1908, written by Udayappa to the plaintiff in which there is an allusion to the question of commission claimed by the agent. I think it is quite clear that at this time there was no binding agreement at all as between the principal and the agent as to whether there should be any or what rate of commission. He writes to the plaintiff alluding to his claims: "As you have now written severely I would send your letter home to the principal and make the necessary arrangements therefor. Our principal is not one who cannot realise the situation," and then he says: "You have now very severely written in your letter that you are very anxious about it and that you came here only for profits and good name and not in consideration of the pay; therefore, I shall write to the principal as per your desire and have the thing settled as per your desire. Do not be anxious about it and make arrangements necessary for the collections." Does not that amount to an intention on the part of Udayappa to write to the principal for payment of the commission due to him? I certainly draw the conclusion that he did write such a letter. It is an undisputed fact that the principal has not chosen to produce it. Inasmuch as he has not produced any of the correspondence between himself and his agent at Rangoon, we are bound to draw adverse inference against him wherever it is clear that the production of that correspondence would throw light on the case. At that time, it is clear that no binding agreement had been come to and it was not come to until a considerable time later, because, as late as 3rd September 1903, plaintiff writes to the defendant and says: "We write to you with the intention that we may ask what we want. We are persons who have come depending on you. In many places in these days they are settling commission beforehand for making collections. Vai V. B. has arranged for commission for the partner of Pakke. As some provision has been made for all persons in this manner, we write to you often and often and request you will similarly make some provision for us who have been depending on you." In these circumstances, we may rightly draw the inference that as late as that date, there was no binding agreement between these parties, although pressure to induce the principal to agree to something had been going on for a certain period.

The next document is also an important one and is dated 12th November 1908. It is another letter from the plaintiff to the defendant. There are two requests in that letter. One was a request for extra help from the defendant on the ground that the work of collecting the outstandings had become so arduous that it was impossible for one man to cover the ground. The other request was to have his commission settled. He says: "You must consider well about the fact that I collected money after much difficulty, and write to me as to what I am to take for my commission. I write to you very much and request you to realise the fact that money has to be collected only after much hard work. If you have no mind to give commission, it will be a good thing for you to send a man for my place at the end of the second year. You must send a man like that." That is a statement on the part of the plaintiff that he was doing work which he had not contracted to do and that unless settlement was come to with regard to the rate of remuneration he would give up the business. The next communication we have, is Exhibit X, dated 1st December 1908, written by the principal in answer to this letter and also another which we have not got. He says he will send a person to help him. That is in answer to the first request. He says this: "You have been writing to me that I should write about your matters. You may discuss about this also with Udayappa of Rangoon. You may tell Udayappa about K. P.'s house matter." Beyond that, there is not a word said about his commission and not a word said about the plaintiff's threat that if he was not properly treated with regard to his commission, he would demand to be relieved at the end of the second year. After the date of that letter, the correspondence ceases right up to a period when the plaintiff was due to come home in the natural course of effluxion of the period of his contract. We may assume that the letters covering the intermediate period, have no bearing on the issue of this case. In the first letter, dated 14th July 1910, Exhibit B, written by the plaintiff to the defendant, he says this: "Much trouble has been taken from Peri accounts and things have been very satisfactorily brought to such an extent as this. It is you who should give, considering the pains taken, in accordance with what you wrote formerly that you would give liberally." In Exhibit D, on the 6th August 1910, he again writes: "You had written formerly that you would also (reward) me liberally for collecting amounts taking pains. You are the person who should reward well according to the pains taken; and I am a man who would receive the same. With that object, I have done all the work taking great pains." I infer from these two letters, that the principal must have assented to reward the agent in general terms. At the trial, the case set up by plaintiff was thus:—That he had gone to Rangoon, that he had met Udayappa who had authority from the principal in the matter and that Udayappa settled with him that he should get 5 per cent. commission. The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved this story and found that it was not proved that Udayappa and plaintiff ever entered into any such binding agreement; but he finds that there was some understanding between plaintiff and Udayappa that some commission would be paid. Udayappa in his deposition says that he wrote to his principal about the sumans due and he replied that he would not give sumans having regard to what people were talking about. What the principal meant, in my opinion, was that he would not give him a fixed rate of percentage, but would give him something as remuneration in respect of the sums collected from the old debtors.

That being so, the question arises whether this would constitute in law an enforceable contract. Reliance was placed for the appellants on two cases, Taylor v. Brewer (1) and Roberts v. Smith (2). In these cases, it was held that a promise to pay reward to deserving persons, may be construed in certain circumstances with certain form of words to mean: "I may or may not give anything. If I do give something, I will give exactly what I deem right." On the other hand, the other side relied on the case of Bryant v. Flight (3) where slightly different words were held to mean: "I will give you something, though that something must be determined later." The dividing line may be different in particular cases. The principle is quite clear. Is there an unqualified contract to give something or is the option of giving anything at all, left to the discretion of the proposed donor? I do not think there is much to be gained by a lengthy discussion of the cases. It is a matter of construction on which different Judges will take different views. The view I take of the contract in this case is that it can only be construed, having regard to the circumstances, as an undertaking to give something. I see no express contract in this case. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer, Vakil for the appellants, contended that there cannot be a contract and that we cannot find it in the pleadings, issues, letters or depositions. I have already said that I think it can be found by diligent and patient study in the pleadings. It is rather disguised. It can be dug out. What I do find, is this. It is in terms of the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge in paragraph 11 of the judgment, where he specifically finds an implied contract to pay something to the plaintiff. He is inclined to find it in the deposition of Udayappa which I read. He assumes that having heard from the 1st defendant that he was going to pay plaintiff a percentage in the profits, Udayappa must have told the plaintiff about it at his request and that that knowledge or conversation implies a contract. But I would base my inference as to the contract on a slightly different ground. The silence on the part of the defendant after he received the letter of the 12th November 1908, would itself constitute an implied agreement to pay some rate of commission to the plaintiff if he consented to go on with the work of collecting old debts. My inference as to the contract is also based on another ground, namely, from the uncontradicted letters, Exhibits D and E, in which the agent expressly states that the principal had given an undertaking to pay him handsomely, coupled with the fact that no letter is produced by the defendant of protest that this was not a true account of what he wrote. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer argued that it is void for want of consideration, because by the terms of the original salary chit, the plaintiff was bound to know that there was no consideration for extra remuneration. I think his argument is fallacious, because though it may very well be that the expression "transacting business" would cover certain items of collections, they would only cover such items of collections as the agent agreed to take over. Transacting business in law, cannot be held to cover cases of collections only and no other business at all, especially having regard to the known facts of the business of Nattukottai Chetties. In view of the very nature of the duties imposed upon the plaintiff, there was ample consideration for extra remuneration.

This disposes of the case and there is no need to go into the question of custom, as the only point urged is as to the contract. As to the quantum of remuneration, the Subordinate Judge has very rightly come to the conclusion that 5 per cent. is a reasonable amount and I think his decision should not be interfered with. The appeal fails and is dismissed. Each party shall pay his own costs.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—I entirely agree.

Will, construction of—Legacy of six acres out of 19.40 acres, whether void for uncertainty—English rules of construction, applicability of, to Wills of Hindu agriculturists—Will, uncertain, validity of.

A Hindu agriculturist bequeathed to his father's sister's second son "six acres of good irrigated nanja lands" and died leaving behind him 19.40 acres of land answering to that description. The legatee died before he got the bequest and his heirs sued the residuary legatee for possession of six acres and for mesne profits. The residuary legatee contended that the legacy of six acres was void on account of uncertainty.

Held, that the legacy was not void on account of uncertainty and that the intention of the testator, as gathered from the document, was that, in the absence of agreement, the lands in question should be partitioned by the Court and six acres out of the 19.40 acres allotted to the legatee who had a vested interest in them as a tenant-in-common along with the residuary legatee. [p. 788, col. 2; p. 788, col. 2.]

Per Wallis, C. J.—English rules of construction of Wills are too artificial to apply to the Wills of Hindu agriculturists. [p. 787, col. 2.]

Per Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.—A Will is not void for uncertainty unless it is utterly impossible to put a meaning upon it. [p. 788, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The legacy in this case is of six acres of good irrigated nanja lands in the village of Pudur. Assuming that the legacy is out of the nanja lands owned by the testator, the Will does not say which of them the legatee is to have; and in England such a bequest would have been held void for uncertainty, but for the benevolent rule of construction that the testator is intended to have left the choice to the legatee: Tapley v. Eagleton (1), Bacon's Abridged Title, Election A, and the other authorities referred to in Narayanasami Gramani v. Periakambi Gramani (2), where the rule was applied and recognised. The reasons for reading into the Will something that is not there, viz., that the legatee should himself make the selection, was that without such a provision, the legacy was regarded as bad for uncertainty. In the present case unfortunately, the legatee died without making the election, and the accepted view in England would appear to be that the Will cannot be read as intending that the heirs of the legatee should be allowed to make the election in the event of the legatee dying without having made it. See the old authorities cited in Bacon's Abridged Title, Election C. That would be equivalent to reading it as a bequest of six acres to be elected by the donee and his heirs. In Earl of Brandon v. Merleland (3), where under a settlement a power of election was given to the beneficiary, his heirs or assignees, it was held that this disposition offended against the rule against perpetuities, but that the powers of the beneficiary and of his heirs or assignees were severable, and that an election made by the beneficiary himself in his life-time would be supported. The same rules were recognised and applied in Savill Brothers Limited v. Bethell (4). These are however, somewhat artificial rules to apply to the Will of a Hindu agriculturist who was no doubt familiar with the ordinary process of partitioning lands by the Court in a partition suit, and I think it much more likely that his intention was that in the absence of agreement, the lands in question should be partitioned by the Court than that the legatee should be left to make a selection for himself. In this view I see no sufficient reason why the Court should not give effect to the testator's intention by partitioning off and allotting to him land of the nature and extent indicated in the Will out of the land left by the testator and I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother, whose judgment I have had the advantage of reading.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—This appeal raises a question of some difficulty on the construction of a clause in the Will of one Dhana-koti Mudaliar. The clause in question reads thus: "I give to my father's sister's second son, Murugesu Mudaliar, my big house at Tiruvannamalai and also six acres of good irrigated nanja lands in the village of Pudur in Arcot Taluk and also give him Rs. 3,000 without any restriction from me." No question arises now as to the bequest of the house or of the legacy of Rs. 3,000. Murugesu Mudaliar, the legatee, is dead and his sons are the plaintiffs in this suit. It appears from the evidence that the testator had, besides other lands, 19.40 acres of land in the village of Pudur which answer the description of good irrigated nanja lands, though all of them are not of quite the same quality. They are the lands described in Schedule B to the plaint. The plaintiffs' claim six out of the 19.40 acres and state that the 1st defendant, who is the residuary legatee and also executor by implication, has failed to put them in possession of the six acres and they ask for a decree directing the 1st defendant to deliver possession of six acres of good irrigated nanja lands out of the B Schedule lands in Pudur. In the Schedule, there is a note stating that items 1 to 15 measuring 9 acres 2 cents are good irrigated lands and that plaintiffs want 6 out of the 9 acres 2 cents. The 1st defendant pleaded that he never objected to the plaintiffs' taking their portion of the nannja lands in Pudur bequeathed to their father and that he was not, therefore, liable for mesne profits; and also proceeded to state that the provision in the Will was vague, indefinite and uncertain, and that the plaintiffs had to make their selection from the whole of the lands in Pudur village possessed by the testator, and not solely from the 19.40 acres (paragraph 10 of the written statement). At the 1st hearing, the 1st defendant definitely gave up the contention that the devise of the six acres was void for uncertainty. Judge's Notes printed at page 12 of the printed book.) The only question then that required determination was whether the plaintiffs were entitled to 6 out of 19.40 acres or 6 out of the whole of the extent, the particular six acres being determined by division and not by selection. The District Judge in the Court below has, however, held that the plaintiffs were entitled to select six acres of land out of the lands belonging to the testator in the village of Pudur. The 1st defendant appeals against the decree and contends that the legacy of six acres was void for uncertainty, and the first question is whether there is any uncertainty as to the subject-matter of the legacy.

The Will is in English; but it is clear that the testator was not able to express himself accurately or clearly in that language. The lands which are given are ordinarily cultivable lands. Their extent is certain and their locality immaterial, as their value does not depend upon their situation as in the case of house sites. There is nothing in the Will to indicate that the testator intended the legatee to select any particular six acres he desired. It seems to me that the testator had no idea of any selection by the legatee. In cases, where out of a number of distinct articles or properties some are bequeathed, it is obvious that the testator must have intended the particular properties to be selected by some one, whether it is the legatee or the executor; as for example, one out of the several houses or so many out of the horses in the testator's stable. If again, the devise is of a certain quantity of land at or near a particular place, as for example, twenty acres of land near a house or surrounding a house, then presumably the testator leaves it to the legatee to select the particular twenty acres. So also when a testator is possessed of lands of different descriptions as pasture lands, building sites, garden lands, forest lands and cultivable lands and if he gives only a particular extent, a right of selection may be implied. In the case, for instance, of cash or commodities, there could be no doubt that a legacy of a particular quantity means a fraction of the whole. In the case of lands which may not be all of the same quality, the testator's intention may be to give to the legatee, a right to select a particular quantity from out of a particular locality; that is a matter of construction. In this case, the lands given are ordinary cultivable lands and there is no reason to suppose that the testator made any difference or had any idea of difference with reference to any particular place or locality. I think the reasonable interpretation of the words used by him is that he intended to give to the legatee that fraction out of the total quantity of land which would give him the extent specified in the Will. It is also clear that the testator intended the legatee to have the six acres of land immediately on his death. If the testator intended that the property should vest only on a selection made by the legatee, the language used by him would have been different. We should, I think, construe the Will so as, if possible, to give effect to the legacy. "The modern doctrine", as stated by Jessel, M. R., "is not to hold a Will void for uncertainty unless it is utterly impossible to put a meaning upon it." In re Roberts; Repington v. Roberts (5). I am, therefore, of opinion that the legatee had a vested interest in six out of the 19.40 acres as a tenant-in-common along with the residuary legatee, and is entitled to division by metes and bounds of the 19.40 acres, and have an allotment made to him of six acres. He is, I think, also entitled to mesne profits of the lands for three years prior to the suit as claimed in the plaint. Subject to this modification, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

The memorandum of objections is allowed. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Lessor and lessee—Raiyat, essentials of—Lessee not getting juridical possession, whether raiyat—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—Criminal Court, findings of, whether admissible as evidence in Civil suit.

In order to make the principle, that 'an agricultural tenant who enters upon land and holds under a de facto proprietor bona fide, is entitled to be treated as raiya, although the de facto proprietor is subsequently proved to be not the real owner,' available in the case of a lease, it is essential that the lessor should be in possession of the leased property as de facto landlord and that in good faith he should have inducted into the land a cultivator who has accepted the settlement in good faith. [p. 790, col. 2.]

Where, a lessee took his lease from a person who had no title to confer on him and he never obtained juridical possession of the leased property but was, on the other hand, in attempting to take possession, resisted by a person to whom the leased property had already been sold in execution of a decree against the lessor and where as the result of criminal proceedings taken by the purchaser-possessor under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, the lessee not having been found in possession, was bound down to keep the peace so that he might not interfere with the possession of the purchaser though he had failed to establish his alleged title;

Held, that under the circumstances the lessee was not entitled to be treated as raiya. [p. 790, col. 2.]

The finding of a Criminal Court on the question of possession is admissible in evidence in a civil proceeding taken for the recovery of possession of the same land, to show what order had been made, who the parties to the dispute were, what the land in dispute was and who was held entitled to possession. Babu Jotindra Mohan Chowdhury, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The disputed property belonged to one Parbaty Sankar Pandey whose interest therein was terminated by a sale in execution of a decree held on the 22nd September 1910. On the 24th November 1910, the plaintiff took a lease of the land from Parbaty Sankar Pandey and, in his own words, went to take possession. The result was a dispute with the defendant which culminated in a proceeding under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate found on the 22nd March 1911, that the defendant (then complainant) was in possession and that the accused (now plaintiff) was likely to commit a breach of the peace. He consequently directed that the plaintiff should be bound down and should execute a bond to keep the peace for one year, on the 15th June 1911. The plaintiff instituted this suit for declaration of his title under the lease from Parbaty Sankar Pandey and for recovery of possession. The Courts below, have concurrently found that the lessor of the plaintiff had no subsisting title on the day the lease was granted to him. But while the Court of first instance held that the plaintiff had acquired no title under the lease, the Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the principle of the decision of the Full Bench in Binad Lal Pakashi v. Kalu Pramanik (1), is applicable and that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession as against the defendant, who has failed to establish any title to the property. The question for consideration consequently is, whether this case is governed by the principle of the decision of the Full Bench, namely, that an agricultural tenant who enters upon land, whether it be firm or alluvial [Nundo Kumar Nasker v. Banomali Gyan (2), Rajendra Nath Roy v. Nanda Lal Guha (3)], and holds under a de facto proprietor bona fide, is entitled to be treated as raiya, although the de facto proprietor is subsequently proved to be not the real owner [Ameer

KRISHNA NATH V. MUHAMMAD WAFIZ.

Hossein v. Shee Suhae (4), Zoolfun Bibee v. Radhica Prosonno Chunder (5)].

As was pointed out by this Court in the case of Upendra Narain Bhattacharjee v. Pratap Chunder Pardhan (6), this principle is an encroachment upon the ordinary rule of law that a grantor is not competent to confer upon the grantee a better title than what he himself possesses [Durgi Nikurini v. Gobaridhan Bhose (7)]; and the Courts have repeatedly ruled that the doctrine must be cautiously applied and is not to be extended. Thus in Sharoop Dass Mondul v. Joggessur Roy (8) and Jouab Ali v. Rakibuddin (9), the Court refused to apply this doctrine to zerait lands. In Madan Mohan Singh v. Raj Kishori Kumari (10), the Court refused to apply the principle in derogation of the rule of lis pendens. Again, in Kazi Newaz Khoda v. Ram Jadu Dey (11), Peary Mohun Mondul v. Radhica Mohun Hazra (12), Upendra Narain Bhattacharjee v. Pratap Chunder Pardhan (6) the Court refused to apply the doctrine to cases where the landlord was not in possession in good faith, and it cannot now be disputed that want of good faith either on the part of the lessor or the lessee, makes the rule inapplicable. This accords with the decision in Tepu Mahammad v. Tefayit Muhammad (13), that in order to make the principle applicable, the lessor must be the de facto landlord in possession and must have placed the lessee in possession of the land. This does not in any way conflict with the cases of Atal Rishi v. Lakshmi Narain Ghose (14) and Golan Panja v. Hurish Chunder (15), where the lessee was brought upon the land by an ijaradar for a term who had authority to settle the land with cultivators. We have consequently the position that in order to make the principle available, it is essential that the lessor should be in possession of the disputed property as de facto landlord and that in good faith, he should have inducted into the land a cultivator who has accepted the settlement in good faith.

Tested in the light of this principle, the plaintiff has no case. It is clear that he took his lease from a person who had no title to confer on him, and he never obtained juridical possession of the disputed property. When he attempted to take possession, he was resisted; the result was a criminal case in which it was found that he was not in possession and that it was necessary to bind him down to keep the peace, so that he might not be free to interfere with the possession of the defendants. In a case of this description, the principle of the rule in Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik (1) can have no possible application.

We may add that it was jointly suggested that no reference was permissible to the finding of the Criminal Court on the question of possession. But in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Dinmoni Chowdhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhurani (16), it is clear that the judgment, in the criminal case was admissible in evidence to show what order had been made, who the parties to the dispute were, what the land in dispute was, and who was held entitled to possession. But, even apart from that judgment, there is sufficient evidence on this record to show that the plaintiff never obtained such possession of the land as would entitle him to claim the status of a raiyat although he had taken settlement from a person who had no title to confer on him. Indeed the deposition of the plaintiff shows that it is not his case that he obtained the requisite possession. We must hold accordingly that the plaintiff has no enforceable claim even as against the defendant, who has failed to establish his alleged title.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 3—"Estate"

—Grant of whole village as inam—Proof.

Where a village granted as an inam contains minor inams and ryotwari holdings and the question is whether the village as a whole was granted as an inam or only a portion of it, the fact that it was treated as a whole inam village at the Inam Settlement and the Revenue Authorities themselves subsequently recognized it as such, is a clear proof that the whole village was granted as an inam and is an "estate" within the meaning of Act I of 1908. [p. 722, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decision of the Collector of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suits Nos. 1 to 6 of 1915 (under Act I of 1908).

FACTS appear from the following Judgment of the lower Court:—

"The 1st issue in this suit is as follows:—

"Whether the plaint lands form an estate within the meaning of the Act I of 1908?"

The facts are that the village of Tennur which consisted originally of (i) 153 and odd kawnies—the major inam concerned in the present suit, (ii) 160 and odd kawnies made up of 21 minor inams held by various persons mutually unconnected and with distinct titles and original grants, and (iii) 33 and odd kawnies ryotwari, was constituted at the Inam Settlement an "entire inam village" by transferring the ryotwari area to an adjoining Government village. This obviously merely means that the village was one where all the tenures were inam in character. It is not the case that it was granted to the inamdars as a major or as an entire inam, subject to the claims of a series of minor inamdars. It was granted, or rather the existing grants were confirmed, to 22 different sets of persons, 1 major and 22 minor inamdars.

2. The Act defines an estate as any village of which the land revenue alone has been granted in inam to a person not owning the kudivaram, etc., etc. If it be conceded that the grant was of land revenue alone in this case, and if it be also conceded that the grantee was not the kudivaramdar, yet although the whole village was granted in parcels to a number of sets of persons on this tenure, the village as a whole was not granted to the inamdars in this suit or his predecessor-in-title. He is only one among 22 people who are mutually unconnected. His holding is not, therefore, a village. Nor can he come in, by explaining "a person" to exclude persons, because that would be clearly only in the case of persons joint in interest or title, which is not the present case.

The definition goes on to speak of any separated part of such village. But that again is not the present case. That involves that there was at one time a whole village granted to one inamdars and that at any time subsequent to such grant there has been recognised alienation or division. That is not the present case. It is clear from the inam register that the numerous minor inams which go with the major inam in issue and form the village, have been always disconnected and originally conferred by distinct grants.

3. Accordingly, I find this issue against the respondent and the suit must fail because there is no estate under the Act.

4. This decision is the decision in all the suits by consent of parties and I am not prepared to deprive the appellants of their costs in this appeal."

Mr. R. Kuppuswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Richmond, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against the Collector's finding on appeal in respect of the first issue in the suit, viz., whether the plaint lands form an estate within the meaning of Act I of 1908.

2. The only point raised before me is, whether the plaint lands form part of a whole inam village or of a minor inam, or in other words, whether Tennur is a whole inam village or one of a congeries of minor inams.

3. An examination of the inam and quit-rent registers relating to Tennur shows that it was treated at the Inam Settlement exactly as other whole inam villages. Neither the original grant nor the inam title-deed are forthcoming. In the inam register the whole gudicat is first entered and deductions are made of porambok portions transferred to other villages and old inams. The remainder, 108-14 acres, besides poramboke is entered in the quit-rent register as the inam. In the inam register reference is also made to this entry in Mr. Wallace Traver's Register of the entire village as inam. The other inams of the village were separately settled at the Inam Settlement and particulars are given in the inam register of the village. No deductions on account of poramboke, etc., were made, and they were settled as minor inams.

4. It is represented on behalf of the respondent that the existence of ryotwari lands in the village is against the theory that it was a whole inam village. A remark against title-deed No. 147 shows that at the time of the Inam Settlement some lands in the village were fully assessed. They were presumably resumed and became ryotwari. This will account for the existence of the ryotwari lands referred to in this instance. It does not follow, therefore, that the original grant was not of the village as a whole.

5. It is further argued that it is impossible that there should be in this village, which was assigned for the support of a durga, other inams for the support of a Hindu temple, pallan and another mosque. The register regarding these minor inams shows that with one exception the minor inams came into existence before the grant of the village. The excepted item was itself a re-grant of an older inam by the act of the Ruling Power.

The above shows that the grant of the village was subject to the rights of the minor inamdar in respect of the minor inam situated in it.

There is thus no force in this argument.

6. There is a clear distinction between the grant of the village in question and the grant of the old inams situated in it at the Inam Settlement. Besides it has always been treated by the Revenue Authorities as a whole inam village. From the above considerations I decide that the grant was of a whole inam village and that the village of Tennur is 'an estate' within the meaning of the Act.

7. The appeal is allowed and the Collector's decision and decree reversed and the costs in this and the lower Appellate Court will be borne by the respondent.

S. The Collector will now dispose of the appeal in respect of the second issue in the suit, whether commutation should be allowed.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

JUDGMENT.—By our order, dated July 9th 1915, we referred an issue to the Court below. The finding on this issue has now been returned. We think it desirable very shortly to refer to the nature of the suit. The plaintiff is the daughter-in-law of the defendant. The suit is a suit to recover possession of a house. The house admittedly belonged at one time to the defendant. The house was under attachment in execution of a decree against the defendant. Before the sale, a deed of transfer was executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff. She was his daughter-in law and her husband

MUNNI KOER v. MADAN GOPAL.

(the son of the defendant) was then alive. It was alleged on behalf of the plaintiff that she paid the purchase-money of the house and became the purchaser. It was alleged on behalf of the defendant that the whole transaction was fictitious and that no consideration of any kind ever passed. As the result of the finding of the Court below upon the issue we referred, it is now established that the money was really paid by the father of the plaintiff at the time of the attachment and was duly received by the defendant. There can be no doubt (whether the money actually belonged to the plaintiff or belonged to her father) that the purchase was intended for her benefit. The question is whether under these circumstances, the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the property, it being borne in mind that at the date of the deed of transfer she was under age. It is contended on behalf of the defendant that the contract for sale of the house was absolutely null and void and the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mohori Bibi v. Dharmodas Ghose (1) and also the case of Narakoti Narayana Chetty v. Loyalinga Chetty (2) are relied upon. On the other side the case of Ulfat Rai v. Gauri Shankar (3) and also the case of Raghunath Bakhsh v. Haji Sheikh Muhammad Bakhsh (4) are relied upon. Section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act defines 'transfer of property' as an act by which a living person conveys property to one or more other living persons, or to himself and one or more living persons. Section 6, clause (h), of the same Act sets forth the class of transfers of property which cannot be made. It does not state that a transfer cannot be made to a minor. Section 7 provides that every person competent to contract and entitled to transferable property is competent to transfer such property. Nowhere in the Act is it provided that a minor is incapable of being a transferee of property, and as a matter of practice we are well aware that transfers of immoveable property are every day made to minors. Section 127 by necessary implication shows that a person who is not competent to contract, may be the donee of immoveable property, and that even in the case of property burdened with an obligation, if after he has become competent to contract and aware of the obligation, retains the property he becomes bound. It seems to us that the argument on behalf of the defendant amounts to this, that the present suit to recover possession of the house must be regarded in exactly the same way as if the plaintiff was bringing a suit for specific performance of a contract. In our opinion, it ought not to be so regarded. It could hardly be said, if it was shown beyond all doubt that the father of the plaintiff entered into a contract for the sale of this property and instead of taking the conveyance himself had directed the vendor to execute the conveyance in favour of his daughter, that she would not be entitled to recover possession of the property. This in all probability was exactly what happened in the present case; but even if we assume on behalf of the defendant that it was the girl herself who entered into the contract and that it was her money which was paid to the defendant, it can make no difference. As soon as the defendant received the purchase-money and executed the conveyance, she became entitled to the possession of the property. Very different considerations would arise if after having agreed to sell the property, the defendant before receiving the price had refused to execute a conveyance and the plaintiff was driven to a suit for specific performance. In such a case, the plaintiff would have to set up the contract. In our opinion, the decision of the Court below and also of the learned Judge of this Court were not correct. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside both the decrees of the Courts below and also the decree of the learned Judge of this Court and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs in all Courts, including both hearings in this Court.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(December 4th, 1913.)—The suit was for possession of a holding from which appellant alleges that he was illegally ejected. The facts as found by the Commissioner are, that the appellant agreed in writing to relinquish this land in 1319 but did not do so, that he subsequently during the currency of 1319 agreed verbally to give up at the commencement of 1320. Now these relinquishments, written or oral, are according to law in themselves nothing. The landholder is not entitled in any way to enforce these agreements. Surrender under section 83, means the actual surrender of the land itself and unless a tenant himself deliberately relinquishes possession, the landholder is not entitled to take possession except by means of a suit for ejectment. The evidence in regard to the alleged relinquishments, oral and written, is relevant only as evidencing the intention of the appellant to surrender. They were regarded by the Commissioner as having a more direct effect on the question before him. The question really comes to this: Did the landholder's tenants cultivate in 1320 with the consent of the appellant? I do not think that this can be considered to be in any way proved. The suit was promptly brought after cultivation had been commenced by the landholder's tenants.

In my opinion, the view of the case taken by the Commissioner, was wrong in law. His decision should be reversed and the decision of the Court of first instance

PARTAPI V. HAZARA SINGH.

JUDGMENT.—The orders of a Division Bench of this Court of 8th and 10th November 1913 referring to a Full Court certain questions therein set forth give the facts of this case. We had two connected appeals before us, whereof one (No. 1014 of 1909) has been compromised and the other remains for decision, very much the same questions being involved in both cases. It is unnecessary for us to repeat what has already been written. Put briefly, the first question we have to decide is whether plaintiff, daughter of Jaura and Musammal Mano, has the power by custom to contest an alienation by the latter of the property formerly belonging to Jaura and his brother Jit, both deceased, the alienation being by Will and in favour of the sons and grandson of another daughter. The question of onus is easily disposed of. The first Court—see issues 3 and 4—clearly laid upon defendants Nos. 3 to 6 the burden of proving that the Will was valid and that plaintiffs had not the power to contest it, and it found on both points in favour of plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court did not directly decide this question, but, taking up issue 2, found that Sundar Singh, father of defendants Nos. 3 to 6, was legally khana-damad and appointed heir to Jaura and thus the alienation by Will was unassailable. We have examined the evidence regarding khana-damadship and appointment as heir and our conclusion is that these things are not proved. We think the facts are more consistent with the theory that Sundar Singh and his wife merely came from time to time and helped the old man and that the relations between them and him never went any further. But we need not discuss this matter in detail, for we think plaintiff fails on the question of power to contest. It is a power of a very unusual kind, usually found invested in agnates, which a daughter is not; and there can be no doubt that the burden of proof in issue 4 should have been laid initially on plaintiff.

In consequence of the views expressed by the Full Court aforesaid, which declined to deal directly with the questions referred to it by the Division Bench, we do not get much help from the rulings quoted before us and discussed at length in the aforesaid referring order. They are noted in the foot-note.* We must now take it that the dictum of Roe, S. J., in Sher Muhammad Khan v. Muhammad Khan (1) beginning "It must be remembered" and ending "present holder of the estate," is little better than a pious opinion and obiter dictum; that the expressions of opinion and the findings in Chiragh Bibi v. Hassan (2), apply only to cases among the Qhelua Arains of Lahore, where daughters occupy a very strong position, and must not be treated as implying any inherent connection universally existing between the fact of heirship and the right to contest an alienation by the holder for the time being; that the dictum in Lahori v. Radho (3) that where a widow of a reversioner might succeed collaterally to the widow of the last male holder and, therefore, had a right to control that widow's acts, is one applicable solely to the Girths of the Kangra District and is not of general application; that a similar remark applies mutatis mutandis to the dictum in Musammal Kokan v. Lakhoo (4) that a sister among Girths of Kangra, can control the widow of the last male holder. These rulings, then, being of no use to us in the present case, which is concerned with Jat Sikhs of Jullundur, we have left Nur-ul-Nissa v. Gauhar-ul-Nissa (5), in which it was pointed out that there is no necessary connection between A being heir to B and A's having the power to control B's dealings with the property A may some day inherit, a point also emphasized in Ali Muhammad v. Suraj-ul-din (6). With that view, we express concurrence, and it follows that the onus should have been laid on plaintiff.

DEVARASETTI NARASIMHAM v. DEVARASETTI VENKIAH.

This being so, plaintiff's Counsel urges—quoting Gobind Ram v. Rani Suraj Kaur (7), a case of this Court—that the case should be remanded to the lower Courts to enable him to produce evidence in support of his contention that his client has, by custom, the power to control the acts of her mother. Asked what he has to say now in favour of that contention, he points to cases of succession by daughters in the Jullundur District—Musammal Fatima v. Ghulam Muhammad Shah (8); Bhadhawa v. Gandhella (9) Jalahas; Wazir Ali Khan v. Musammal Asmat Bibi (10) Pathans; and also to paragraph 23, Rattigan's Digest. He admits that his client is aware, and he is aware, of no Jat Sikh case in Jullundur District of a daughter's even succeeding against any collateral; much less of her contesting an alienation made either by a male or a female. In these circumstances, we think it would be contrary to the practice of this Court to allow the parties to waste their time and money by a remand, albeit technically permissible.

The question of acquiescence was also argued before us, and, if a finding was necessary, we would find it in favour of plaintiff. As matters stand, we need not discuss it. We hold that plaintiff has no locus standi to sue and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

The definition of "moveable property" given in section 2 (13) of the Civil Procedure Code does not govern the provisions of the Limitation Act. [p. 796, col. 2.]

"Immoveable property" as defined in section 3 (25) of the General Clauses Act, 1897, includes standing crops. A suit, therefore, to recover the value of such crops wrongfully cut and carried away is not a suit for the recovery of compensation within the meaning of Article 29 of the Limitation Act. Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Petitioners.

Mr. V. Rameswami, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for determination is whether standing crops are to be treated as moveable or immoveable property for the purposes of the Indian Limitation Act.

It is argued for the petitioners that section 2, clause 13, of the Civil Procedure Code defines moveable property as including standing crops and that a suit for recovery of the value of standing crops wrongfully cut and carried away is a suit for the recovery of compensation in respect of moveable property governed by Article 29 of the second Schedule to the Limitation Act.

I do not think that the definition in the Civil Procedure Code can govern the provisions of the Limitation Act. There is no definition of moveable property in the Limitation Act and reference must be had to the General Clauses Act, X of 1897, which enacts that the definitions given in the Act shall govern all enactments passed subsequent thereto. Immoveable property is defined by clause 25 of section 3 as including things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth. This will clearly include standing crops. Pandah Gazi v. Jennuddi (1); Sadu v. Sambhu (2).

Though standing crops were included in the term 'moveable property' for the purposes of the Civil Procedure Code, a similar change which was proposed when the Limitation Act was drafted in 1908 was for some reason or other given up.

If standing crops are immoveable property, the case is governed by the Full Bench decision in K. tagiri Venkataswami v. Patibanda Basavayya (3).

The decision of the District Munsif is correct and the petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sec. II, Act. 31—Suit of Small Cause Court nature—Right of fish—Second appeal.

Where the plaintiff brought a suit to recover a certain sum of money on the allegation that a particular tank was the joint property of the parties and that the defendant had caught fish from the said tank and appropriated the entire fish by selling them for his own benefit:

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken to this appeal, on the ground that the suit is one of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and could not properly be brought before this Court in second appeal. On behalf of the defendants-appellants reference is made to Article 31 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Act IX of 1887). The question is whether the suit as framed, was one for profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiffs alleged to have been wrongfully received by the defendants. The case seems to me very much on the boundary line. It is almost covered by the ruling in Rameshar Singh v. Durga Das (1), but there remains a doubt to my mind whether the money claimed in the present case was alleged in the plaint to have been "wrongfully received" by the defendants. The plaintiffs' case was that the defendants caught and sold certain fish under such circumstances that the plaintiffs were entitled to a rateable share in the sale-proceeds, which share the defendants withheld and wrongfully appropriated to themselves. I am not clear on the wording of the plaint that there was any allegation that the catching of the fish or selling of the same constituted any infringement of the plaintiffs' right. I incline, therefore, to the opinion that the objection is well founded and that as a matter of law, no second appeal lay in this case. I have thought it expedient, however, to hear the appeal on the merits. The point raised by the appeal can only be determined by a careful examination of the pleadings in the Courts below. The plaintiffs alleged that they were part-owners of a certain tank which had been divided on partition between themselves and other co-sharers, including some of the defendants. The dispute was with regard to fishery rights. In the third paragraph of the plaint, it is alleged that the fish were ordinarily to be found in abundance in a portion of the tank situated in the share of the plaintiffs' alone. Indeed it was alleged that "at the time of fishing"—by which I understand, immediately any attempt was made to net the tank—all fish therein always collected together in a deep pool mentioned in the first portion of the said paragraph, which the plaintiffs alleged to be situated in the portion of the tank belonging to themselves alone. Nevertheless the plaint goes on to state that whatever fish were captured out of this pool (presumably also any fish which might by some accident be captured in any other portion of the tank), were always disposed of for the benefit of all co-sharers. It is expressly pleaded that those defendants who were co-sharers in the proprietary rights over the tank had received their shares in the price of the fish caught in the plaintiffs' portion of the tank. The cause of action put forward was that during the year in suit, the defendants having colluded together fished the tank and appropriated whatever fish they caught, selling the same for their own benefit and withholding the plaintiffs' share. There is certainly no allegation in the plaint that fish were taken by the defendants from one part of the tank rather than from another. The case set up for the defendants, seems to me clear enough. They agree with the plaintiffs that there was a deep pool in the tank in suit in which fish ordinarily collected and in which alone they could be captured in any quantity. This deep pool, they allege, is situated in the portion of the tank allotted to them. They claim that this allotment entitles them to net this pool and appropriate any fish which they might find therein for their own benefit. Both expressly and by implication, they deny the plea of the plaintiffs that fish taken from the tank, were dealt with for the benefit of all the co-sharers in whatsoever part of the tank they might be captured. I do not say that the Court of first instance altogether misapprehended the point in issue; but it is clear that the attention of the learned Munsif was concentrated to a large extent on a question of fact which was only incidentally raised by the pleadings, namely, the question whether the deep pool, the existence of which both parties admitted, was situated in the portion of the tank allotted on partition to the plaintiffs or in the portion allotted to the defendants. In substance, however, the learned Munsif upheld the case set up by the defendants. He held it proved that they had only caught fish in the portion of the tank allotted to them on partition and that they were entitled to appropriate to themselves any fish so caught. The plaintiffs went on appeal to the Court of the District Judge. In their memorandum of appeal to that Court, they again raised the issue of fact which had been decided against them, by contending that the evidence on the record proved that the defendants had caught fish in the portion of the tank allotted to the plaintiffs' share. Nevertheless the fifth paragraph of their memorandum of appeal seems to me to raise clearly enough the plea upon which the plaint was originally based. The learned District Judge proceeded to state the question for determination in very general terms and I must confess to having found it somewhat difficult to follow portions of the argument on which he has based his decision. He points out that the case set up for the defendants might involve serious practical difficulties in the event of each co-sharer attempting simultaneously with others to capture fish in the particular portion of the tank allotted to him on partition. He repudiates the contention that the particular deep pool in which fish ordinarily collected, can be regarded as the property of a particular co-sharer, so as to give that co-sharer exclusive right to any fish which he might capture therein. In substance, he seems to me to have affirmed the case set up by the plaintiffs, that any fish captured from the tank were dealt with as the property of all the co-sharers in whatever portion of the tank any particular fish might be captured. If this is a correct view of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, there is obviously no force in this appeal, which is based on the plea that there should have been a specific finding as to the portion of the tank in which, or from which the defendants had captured the fish which formed the subject-matter of the suit. For these reasons I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. K. V. Madhavan Nair for Mr. T. Eromun Unni, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Order XXI, rule 99, Civil Procedure Code, says that where the obstruction was by a person claiming in good faith to be in possession on his own account, the Court "shall" make an order dismissing the application (that is, the application under Order XXI, rule 97). Here the Government is found to have obstructed delivery because it claimed the land to be river poramboke belonging to them. There can be no doubt that the claim was a claim made in good faith.

By an almost culpable carelessness, the counter-petition signed by the Acting Collector of Malabar, does not expressly state that the Government is in possession or claims possession in good faith, and it only states that the Government obstructed delivery because it is the owner of the land.

But I think it is clear that their possession was not denied, as the respondent wanted to get possession after removing their obstruction.

Order XXI, rule 98, gives jurisdiction to the Court to direct possession only if it is satisfied that the obstruction was by the judgment-debtor or by some other person at his instigation. Even if there is no question of jurisdiction involved, and section 115, Civil Procedure Code, does not, therefore, apply, this is a fit case for interference under the Charter Act.

The order of the District Munsif is set aside and the decree-holder's Petition No. 471 of 1913 will stand dismissed.

In view of the carelessness above pointed out and under the circumstances, there will be no order as to costs.

Evidence—Inadmissibility in evidence of documents when not material—Finding of fact—Second appeal—Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 41.

The inadmissibility of a document supporting a debt is not material where the defendant has admitted having received the money borrowed by him. [p. 801, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Divisional Judge, Shahpur Division, dated 24th June 1913, confirming that of the District Judge, Shahpur, dated the 11th July 1912, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Fazl-i Hussain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-respondents brought a suit against the defendants-appellants to recover Rs. 2,453-3-6, principal and interest, alleged to be due to them on bahi account. In answer to the plaintiffs' claim, the defendant pleaded that he had had no dealings with the plaintiffs and that he did not owe them on the account sued for. When the statements of the parties were taken down by the Court, it was alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendant had had dealings with Ram Chand, father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and grandfather of plaintiffs No. 3 and 5, that the plaintiffs and Ram Chand were members of a joint Hindu family which carried on money-lending business, and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to sue the defendant to recover the money due by him to the joint family. The defendant in his statement admitted that he had had dealings with Ram Chand and that he had had contracted debts to the amount of Rs. 1,944-6-0, but he went on to say that he had repaid the whole amount and that nothing was due by him to the plaintiffs. He added that Ram Chand deceased and the plaintiffs did not form a joint Hindu family and that he had never agreed to pay interest on the loans raised by him from time to time.

The District Judge drew four issues and held that the plaintiffs were members of the joint Hindu family, that they were competent to sue for the debt due to the family of which Ram Chand deceased was also a member, that the repayments pleaded by the defendant had not been proved and that the plaintiffs were entitled to charge interest on the principal money advanced at the rate of one per cent. per mensem. Upon these findings the District Judge decreed the plaintiffs' claim in full.

On appeal, the learned Divisional Judge agreed in the findings arrived at by the District Judge upon all the issues and dismissed the appeal.

One of the points urged before the Divisional Judge was that in some of the entries which occur in the plaintiffs' bahi on the debit side of the account between the parties, there is no mention of a promise to pay interest at a certain rate on the amount advanced as a loan to the defendant, and that each of these entries is a bond "within the meaning of section 2 (5) of the Indian Stamp Act and as such was liable to stamp duty; and that since it was not stamped, it was not admissible in evidence." The learned Divisional Judge held that none of these entries amounted to a bond on which stamp duty was payable and that the entries in question were admissible in evidence.

From the decree of the Divisional Judge, a second appeal has been preferred to this Court by the defendant, and the only question of law urged before us, is the one relating to the inadmissibility of some of the entries in the plaintiffs' bahi upon that ground taken before the learned

PRASANNA KUMAR DUTT PURKAYASTHA v. JANANENDRA KUMAR DUTTA.

Divisional Judge and to which we have just referred. It is also urged by the defendant's learned Counsel that several of the entries in the plaintiffs' baki, on which the suit is based, amount to receipts as defined by the Stamp Act and that since they are not stamped they are inadmissible in evidence. In the view that we take of the case, it is unnecessary for us to go into these points. In the Courts below, it was admitted by the defendant that he had raised from Ram Chand (who was the manager of the business of the plaintiffs' joint family) loans amounting to Rs. 1,944-6-0, but he pleaded that he had paid their amount and that nothing was due by him to the plaintiffs. The defendant having admitted that the aggregate amount of the debts contracted by him amounted to Rs. 1,944-6-0, no question of the admissibility or otherwise of the items constituting this amount, arises in the case; and the only question which requires decision is as to whether the defendant has succeeded in proving that he had repaid this amount, as pleaded by him. Both the Courts have fully considered the question of the repayments relied upon by the defendant and have come to the conclusion that no repayments are established. This is a finding of fact and we cannot go behind it in second appeal.

We maintain the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 121—Encumbrance, meaning of—Adverse possession for statutory period before sale, if encumbrance—Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), s. 70.

An interest acquired in an estate by adverse possession for the statutory period before its sale under section 70 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, is an encumbrance within the meaning of Article 121 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1908. [p. 802, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT—In this case, it is conceded that the revenue sale of 1897 under which the plaintiff-appellant claims, became final and conclusive more than twelve years before the date on which the suit was instituted. That being so, we may accept the contention of the appellant's learned Pleader that the finding in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the principal defendants have been in occupation of the lands in suit as trespassers for more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, refers to adverse possession before the sale. Assuming this in the appellant's favour, the appeal may be decided on a very short ground. The question is one of limitation. Is or is not Article 121 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act applicable to this case? It is applicable if the nature of the interest acquired by the principal defendants by adverse possession is an "encumbrance" within the meaning of the word as it is there used. It is a question of terminology. Is such an interest properly described as an encumbrance? It seems to us that in view of the decisions of this Court in Karmi Khan v. Brojo Nath Das (1) and Nuffer Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Rajendra Lal Goswami (2) and of the earlier authorities which were cited and followed in those cases, the questions which we have stated, can admit only of an affirmative answer. The learned Pleader for the appellant contends that the interest is not an encumbrance and cannot properly be described as such. He refers to the cases of Kumar Kalanand Singh v. Syed Sarafat Hossein (3) and Rahimuddi Munshi v. Nalini Kanta Lahiri (4). No doubt in those cases, it seems to have been held in regard to section 54 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859) that in the expression "subject to all encumbrances" which there occurs, the word "encumbrances" does not include an interest acquired before the date of the sale by adverse possession for the statutory period. On the other hand, it has always been held that the word as used in section 37 where the expression is "free from all encumbrances," includes such an interest at any rate for the purposes of limitation, and this point as to the meaning of the word in Article 121 was not considered in the cases of Kumar Kalanand Singh v. Syed Sarafat Hossein (3) and Rahimuddi Munshi v. Nalini Kanta Lahiri (4).

(1) 22 C. 244.

(2) 25 C. 167.

DITTA RAM v. RUP CHAND.

In the present case, the sale took place not under Article XI of 1859, but under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation of 1884. We assume again in the appellant's favour that the learned Subordinate Judge misapplied section 71 of the Regulation and that the sale was the sale of an estate under section 70. But the interest which the defendants acquired, is in our opinion on the authorities an encumbrance within the meaning of Article 121 and the suit is barred by limitation. The contention of the learned Pleader for the appellant that under Article 142 or 144, the period of limitation was twelve years from the date when possession was formally given to the purchaser at the sale, cannot be accepted.

We may mention that there are two plots in dispute in this suit. The plaintiff's title to the first plot fails on the facts found by the Subordinate Judge, which cannot be now successfully assailed. His title to the one-half share of the second plot fails on the ground we have indicated.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellants.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are fully stated in the judgments of the lower Courts, and it is not necessary to repeat them here. It is not disputed that Santu Ram, uncle of the plaintiffs, was appointed an executor by the Will of Tulsu Ram, dated 8th March 1893, he took out Probate of the Will and during his life-time administered the estate of the testator according to the directions contained in the Will. He retained one-half of the estate in his own hands, and sold the other half to Dattu Ram, father of the defendants, for Rs. 2,250. This sum of Rs. 2,250 was allowed to remain in the hands of Dattu Ram, and he entered into an agreement, Exhibit P-1, dated 24th November 1894, with Santa Ram whereby he undertook to spend the money in his hands in charity as directed in the Will of Tulsu Das. The agreement of the 24th November 1894 was renewed on the 24th November 1897, Exhibit P-2, the terms of the later agreement being substantially the same as those of the earlier one.

KRISHNASWAMI NAIDU V. SEETHALAKSHMI AMMAL.

Santu Ram, the executor named in the Will of Tulsi Das, is dead, and the pre-ent suit has been brought by the plaintiffs, who are heirs of Santu Ram, to recover from the sons of Dattu Ram, who is also dead, Rs. 2,138-6-0 made up of two items of Rs. 1,055 and 1,083-6-0 alleged to be due to the plaintiffs as heirs of Santu Ram from Dattu Ram, deceased, under the agreement, Exhibit 2, dated 24th November 1897. The grounds upon which the said two sums are alleged to be due to the plaintiffs, are explained in the lower Courts' judgments, and the sole question for decision before us, is whether the plaintiffs, as the heirs of Santu Ram, can sue the heirs of Dattu Ram to recover the sums in question, aggregating Rs. 2,138-6-0, on the strength of the agreement, dated the 24th November 1897, as if these sums were due to Santu Ram as a private creditor and had nothing whatever to do with the administration of the estate of Tulsi Das, deceased, in accordance with the Will, dated 8th March 1893.

Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit, holding that Santu Ram, the sole executor under the Will of Tulsi Das, being dead, the estate of Tulsi Das is now unrepresented, and that until another person is duly appointed under Act V of 1881 to administer the estate of Tulsi Das, the defendants as heirs of Dattu Ram are not liable to account for the moneys belonging to the estate of Tulsi Das, which are in their hands under the agreement dated 24th November 1897. After hearing the learned Counsel for the appellants in support of the appeal, we are of opinion that the lower Courts' decision is perfectly correct. Plaintiffs' suit comprises two reliefs: (1) They sue to recover Rs. 1,055, which is said to have been spent by the plaintiffs in accordance with the directions of the testator, but which, under the agreement of the 24th November 1897, should have been spent by Dattu Ram; and (2) they demand that a fresh agreement in respect of the balance of Rs. 1,083-6-0 alleged to be in the hands of the defendants, be executed by them in terms of the agreement of the 24th November 1897. Both these reliefs are directly connected with the administration of the estate of Tulsi Das, and we fail to understand what locus standi the plaintiffs, as the heirs of Santu Ram, have to obtain these reliefs against the defendants, heirs of Dattu Ram, it being admitted that the plaintiffs have not been empowered by a competent Court to administer the estate of Tulsi Das in accordance with his Will of the 8th March 1893. Admittedly, the plaintiffs have still in their hands funds belonging to the estate of Tulsi Das, and it is out of those funds that they have spent the sum of Rs. 750 which together with interest amounts to Rs. 1,055, and which, they say, should have been contributed by Dattu Ram according to the agreement of 1897. The plaintiffs have spent nothing, or at any rate, should have spent nothing, out of their own pockets; and no ground for contribution from the defendants on the basis of a personal undertaking on the part of Dattu Ram is made out. The agreement of 24th November 1897, must be read with the Will of Tulsi Das; and reading the two together, it is clear that Dattu Ram or his heirs could be called to account, so far as the sum of Rs. 2,250 in his hands was concerned, only by a person duly authorised to administer the estate of the testator. The plaintiffs do not occupy this status, and their suit has rightly been dismissed by both the Courts. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Property given for maintenance to the illegitimate son of an undivided deceased co-parcener cannot be treated as the ancestral property of the illegitimate son in which the son of that illegitimate son gets a right by birth. The case of Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (1) quoted by the appellant's learned Vakil was the case of a gift by a father to his son of property which would have, but for the gift, on such descent, descended to the son and been ancestral property in the son's hands, the learned Judges holding that a father making such a gift, might be presumed to have intended his son to take it as if the son had inherited it. The case of Hazarimal Babu v. Abani Nath (2), was a case of gift again by a father for the maintenance of his sons and sons' descendants.

Without expressing an opinion as to whether the case of Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (1), was rightly decided, the two cases above noted, are clearly distinguishable from the present case.

The lower Courts were, therefore, right in holding that the son of the illegitimate son did not obtain any right by birth in property given to his father for maintenance, when that gift was not made by the father's father. The second appeal is dismissed with costs. The petition put in by the respondent is also dismissed with costs.

Appeal and petition both dismissed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Bareilly, dated the 2nd July 1914.

Mr. S. D. Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by a usufructuary mortgagee to recover possession on the allegation that the defendants-mortgagors had never given him possession over the mortgaged property in accordance with the terms of the contract. The suit was brought within six years of the date from which the mortgagee was to have received possession. Profits were claimed for the entire period of six years. The only question discussed in the Courts below was as to the amount of the said profits. A point of limitation is raised in second appeal to this Court, it being contended that the suit was governed, so far as the claim for profits was concerned, by Article 109 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act (Act IX of 1908). The mortgage-deed is registered and in my opinion, the claim for profits was in substance one for compensation for breach of a contract in writing registered and subject to the period of limitation prescribed by Article 116. I can find no authority to the contrary and the view which I have taken, seems to have been assumed in the cases of Balgobind Das v.

MATHURA PRASAD v. KARIM BAKSH.

Barkat Ali (1) and Collector of Mirzapur v. Dewan Singh (2). The only other plea taken in the memorandum of appeal, assails the finding of the lower Appellate Court as to the amount of the annual profits which the plaintiff was entitled to recover. I think the appellants are up against a finding of fact on this point with which I cannot interfere. The appeal, therefore, fails and I dismiss it with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Easement—Customary right in nature of easement—Right of burial.

Where a particular grove land was used by the family of the Muhammadan residents of a village as burial ground:

Held, that the right claimed by them was not an easement but a "customary right in the nature of an easement." [p. 806, col. 2.]

Messrs. M. L. Agarwala and Ben y Kumar Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Percy Lal Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises, may be stated as follows:—

The plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants are Muhammadan residents of a certain village. The defendant-appellant is a Hindu, a mahajan of the same village. The dispute relates to a certain plot of grove land therein situated.

The ancestors of the plaintiffs and of the pro forma defendants held this grove as tenants. They executed a series of deeds purporting to transfer whatever rights they possessed therein, to the defendant. A dispute having broken out between the parties, the present suit has been brought by the plaintiffs to enforce a right, alleged to exist in favour of the family of which the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants are members, to bury their dead in the said grove.

The Court of first instance apparently found that such a right did exist in favour of the family to which the plaintiffs belong, but that this right extended only to a small portion of the grove in dispute. The learned Munsif, however, proceeded to grant the plaintiffs a declaration which was so cautiously worded that it is difficult to conceive of what use it could have been to them; it is consequently not surprising that the defendant did not appeal against it. The plaintiffs appealed, and there was no cross-objection filed by the contesting defendant. It is only by reference to the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that one can ascertain whether he sought to support the decree of the Court of first instance on any of the points which had been decided against him. It does not appear to me that he did so.

The first issue as framed by the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal, was in these terms:—"Have the plaintiffs a right to bury their dead in the whole area of the disputed grove, or only in the particular portion of it specified in the lower Court's decree?"

The point has not been taken in second appeal that the frame of this issue begs the questions in dispute, or any of them, in favour of the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge, in spite of the curious frame of the first Court's decree, apparently understood the learned Munsif to have found in favour of the plaintiffs that they had a right to bury their dead in a certain portion of the disputed area, and he considered only whether that right did or did not extend over the whole area in dispute. If exception had been taken to this in the memorandum of appeal, I should have felt strongly disposed to remit an issue for a further finding. As the case for the appellant was put to me in argument the notion that the lower Appellate Court had assumed any point against him without deciding it, was expressly disclaimed. I was invited to consider that, in spite of the frame of the issue, the learned Subordinate Judge had in fact decided both points, viz. that there existed in favour of the plaintiffs, a right to bury their dead in the land in dispute and, secondly, that this right extended over and applied to the whole of the disputed area.

Of the pleas taken in the memorandum of appeal before me, those embodied in the 2nd, 3rd and 4th paragraphs, may at once be rejected. In the 4th paragraph, a point of law is sought to be raised which was not taken in either of the Courts below, and I do not think it is a question which I should permit to be raised at this stage.

The contention put forward in the second paragraph would seem to be that a right to use land for the burial of the dead can only exist to the extent of placing one dead body on the top of another, i. e., to a specific area already occupied by corpses previously interred. This seems to me obviously unsustainable. Nor does the fact put forward in the third paragraph, that the greater portion of the plot in dispute has been kept under cultivation by the appellant, seems to me in itself any reason for interfering with the decree of the Court below. It is quite conceivable that the plaintiffs might have a right to bury a deceased member of their family on a particular spot, even though the surface of the ground at that point might be under cultivation by the defendant so long as it was not required by the plaintiffs for purposes of burial. The main contention in support of this appeal is that embodied in the first paragraph of the appellant's memorandum. As stated, the plea taken is that there cannot be any easement in law "for burying the dead in a case like this;" I do not altogether understand what is meant by the words "in a case like this," but the argument as laid before me, is based on the provisions of the Indian Easements Act, V of 1882, and in so far as it rests upon that Act, it is unanswerable. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that there exists in favour of the plaintiffs, or more strictly speaking in favour of the family to which the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants belong, a customary easement of burying their dead in the entire area of the disputed grove. There certainly cannot be a "customary easement" within the meaning of the definition in section 18 of Act

V of 1882, for the simple reason that the right set up is not within the definition of an easement in section 4 of the same Act. It is not claimed by the plaintiffs, and has not been found in their favour in virtue of their ownership or occupation of any land other than the grove in dispute. There being no dominant heritage, there can be no easement at all within the meaning of Act V of 1882. What I really have to decide, is whether I ought on this ground to set aside the findings of the lower Appellate Court, and either reverse the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge or call for a fresh finding, or whether, on the other hand, I can regard the finding in favour of the existence of a customary easement as a finding that there exists a customary right of the nature of an easement, independently of the provisions of the Indian Easements Act, such as is safeguarded by the saving provisions of section 2 of the Act itself. That there can be a customary right of burial under circumstances which obviously exclude the application of the provisions of Act V of 1882, for the reason already noted, i. e., the absence of any dominant heritage, I take to be settled law, as is apparent from such decisions as that in Mohidin v. Shivelingappa (1), which rests in part upon a decision of this Court in Kuar Sen v. Mamman (2). There is no specific reference to the provisions of the Indian Easements Act in the judgment of the Court below, and it seems more reasonable to suppose that the learned Subordinate Judge used the expression "customary easement" loosely, instead of the words "customary right in the nature of an easement," than to assume that he was entirely ignorant of the provisions of the Indian Easements Act. Accepting the findings of the lower Appellate Court in this sense, it seems to me to be substantially a finding of fact, or at any rate to be one with which I ought not to interfere on any of the grounds put forward in this appeal. I am bound to say that I consider the case a somewhat unsatisfactory one. The pleadings of the parties have been loose throughout, and it does seem to me to be open to argument whether the Courts below have held the plaintiffs as strictly as they might have done to the case set up in their written pleadings. Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, cl. (4) (c)—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8—Court-fee payable, when relief sought not valued in plaint—Valuation for purposes of jurisdiction given—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 11, cl. (c).

Where in a suit under section 7, clause (4) (c) of the Court Fees Act, 1870, the plaint contains no valuation of the relief sought but gives a valuation of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction, the Court-fee is to be computed according to the valuation of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction, though the actual value of the relief sought is less, unless the plaintiff with the Court's leave amends the plaint. [p. 807, col. 2; p. 808, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Backergunge, dated the 30th March 1914.

Babu Abinash Chandra Guha, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree rejecting a plaint under the provisions of Order VII, rule 11, clause (c), Civil Procedure Code. We have not had the advantage of hearing any one for the respondent; but the facts appear to be as follows:—

The plaint is dated the 20th February 1914, and originally it bore a stamp of the value of Rs. 10. It is perfectly clear, however, as the learned Pleader for the plaintiff-appellant now concedes, that the suit is much more than a suit for a mere declaratory decree. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, was perfectly correct when he decided by his order of the 7th March 1914, that the Court-fee paid was insufficient. That order, however, might have been to some extent misleading in regard to the amount of the Court fee that ought to have been paid. The suggestion then made was that the plaint should have been stamped as if it was a plaint for the recovery of the property to which the suit related. The plaintiff founding himself on that part of the order of the 7th March, put in an additional fee, the whole fee then paid being the proper ad valorem fee for a suit for the recovery of possession of the property. There is no doubt, however, that the fee payable in the present suit, a suit under sub-clause (c), clause 4, of section 7 of the Court Fees Act, should have been computed under that section according to the amount at which the relief sought had been valued in the plaint. It is true that the plaint contains no valuation of the relief sought. In its paragraph 18 however, a valuation of that suit is made for the purpose of jurisdiction; and under section 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, the value for the computation of Court-fees and the value for the purposes of jurisdiction are to be the same. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, was again correct when by his order of the 21st March 1914 he refused to accept as sufficient, the additional fee which the plaintiff had put in. By that order, he gave the plaintiff a further week for the purpose of putting in the proper fee. The plaintiff failed to carry out that order and on the 30th March 1914, the suit was dismissed by the decree under appeal. The case is perhaps one of some hardship. In the first place, it may be that the plaintiff was originally misled by the form in which the order of the 7th March 1914 was drawn up. In the second place, the amount at which the suit was valued for the purposes of jurisdiction was possibly greater than the actual value of the relief sought. If that be so, however, the plaintiff should not have contented himself with a simple failure to carry out the Subordinate Judge's order, but should have asked for leave to amend the plaint. In the circumstances, the conclusions at which we have arrived is that we should set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and direct that the plaint be accepted, provided that plaintiff pays the Court-fee computed on the footing that the value of the relief sought is six thousand rupees, within fourteen days of the receipt of the record by the Court below. If the deficit fee is not paid within that time, this appeal will stand dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 132—Mortgage-deed—Option of mortgagee to sue on failure to pay interest or at his pleasure Starting point of limitation.

A mortgage-deed dated 8th December 1895 provided that the mortgage could be foreclosed at the end of three years, that the mortgage debt was to carry Rs. 31-8-0 interest half-yearly to be paid half-yearly and that if two periods of six months elapsed without interest being paid, the mortgagee was to have the option of maintaining the period of the mortgage and suing only for the interest or of cutting short the mortgage (miyad-i-rahn fishk karkar) and suing for the whole debt, principal and interest. No interest was ever paid. The suit was instituted on 17th April 1909. The defendant pleaded limitation:

Held, that under Article 132 of the Limitation Act, the period began to run from the time when the money sued for became due, viz. 8th December 1896, and that, therefore, the suit was barred by time. [p. 509, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Delhi Division, dated the 11th March 1912.

Mr. Beechey, for the Appellant.

Rai Bahadur Pandit Shoo Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for the purpose of deciding the appeal before us, are as follows:—Muhammad Ibrahim held a piece of nazul land on lease from the Municipal Committee of Delhi. On this, he erected a building which he mortgaged to the plaintiff. As Muhammad Ibrahim fell into arrears with his rent, the Municipal Committee turned him out, and gave the land on lease to Abdul Ahad, who pulled down the old building which was in a dilapidated condition and partly on the site in question and partly on an adjoining site, erected a large substantial building. The plaintiff now seeks to recover his mortgage-money with interest from Muhammad Ibrahim and Abdul Ahad. Plaintiff's claim comes to Rs. 2,234-8-0. The first Court gave plaintiff a decree for Rs. 103 only—this being the estimated value of the materials in the old building—against Abdul Ahad, and for the rest of the claim against Muhammad Ibrahim. Plaintiff, having appealed in vain against Abdul Ahad to the Divisional Judge, has lodged a further appeal against him in this Court.

The only question which it will be necessary for us to discuss is the question of limitation. In both the lower Courts, it was unsuccessfully urged on behalf of Abdul Ahad that the claim was time-barred. The plea is again urged in this Court, and we think it must be allowed.

The mortgage on which plaintiff sues, was executed on 8th December 1895. The deed provided that the mortgage could be foreclosed at the end of three years, also that the mortgage-debt was to carry Rs. 31-8-0 interest half-yearly, to be paid half-yearly, also that if two periods of six months elapsed without interest being paid, the mortgagee was to have the option of maintaining the period of the mortgage and suing only for the interest due or of cutting short the mortgage (miyad-i-rahn fishk karkar) and suing for the whole debt, principal and interest. No interest was ever paid, so that the mortgagee could, had he so chosen, have sued for the whole mortgage-debt anywhere after the 8th December 1896. If limitation be counted from the

SAKHAWAT ALI S 'AH V. MUHAMMAD ABDUL KARIM KHAN.

8th December 1896, this suit, instituted on 17th April 1909, is time-barred. If, however, limitation be counted from the end of the three years mentioned in the deed, the suit is within time. Article 132 of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act admittedly applies, and the period of limitation is twelve years counted from the time when the money sued for becomes due.

The learned Advocate for the respondent quotes the Full Bench ruling of Khair-ud-din v. Atu Mal (1). That was a case in which the plaintiff claimed under a bond payable by instalments with a clause that if default were made in payment of one or more instalments, the whole should be due at once. To such a case Article 75 applies, and the period of limitation runs from the date of the default, unless the payee waives the benefit of the provision for prompt payment in case of default. Article 132 simply lays down that limitation runs from the date "when the money sued for becomes due." Had the plaintiff sued on the 9th December 1895, how could the mortgagor have pleaded that the money had not become due?

The learned Counsel for the appellant urges that the plaintiff had the option. This no doubt is true. He was not bound to sue, but forbearance to sue would not stop limitation from beginning to run. It is useless, in the face of the Full Bench ruling above referred to, to speak of waiver, for that ruling distinctly lays down that mere forbearance to sue cannot be regarded as sufficient proof of waiver. Except the fact that plaintiff did not sue, there is nothing whatever in the present case which can be regarded as evidence of waiver. It is not a case where the plaintiff had to make any demand before suing, for the mortgage-deed says nothing whatever as to any demand being requisite before a suit is brought. This distinguishes the case from Nettakarupa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (2) and Prem Singh v. Mula Mal (3), which are quoted on appellant's behalf. Mr. Beechey also quotes Maharaja of Benares v. Nand Ram (4), but this was a case where acceptance of instalment after due date, was regarded as sufficient proof of an implied waiver. Mr. Beechey also quotes Amalia v. Kunal (5). This ruling no doubt is in his favour, but we note that the Calcutta High Court has taken a different view. We need not, however, discuss the matter further, as we see no reason whatever why we should not follow the Full Bench ruling of our own Court.

Lastly, Mr. Beechey urges that the words inqad-i-rakn ush karkar show that the plaintiff had to do something else besides bringing a suit if he wished to enforce the penalty clause. We cannot agree. We are of opinion that all that plaintiff had to do, was to bring a suit which would have at once shown that the plaintiff was availing himself of the option. We hold that the whole mortgage-debt was due as soon as two successive defaults in the half-yearly instalments of interest occurred, and that the present suit should have been dismissed in toto as time-barred. But as there is no cross-appeal and no cross-objections have been lodged, the decree passed by the lower Courts will stand.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge of Aligarh, dated the 1st April 1914.

Mr. Shafiuzzaman, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

RAFIQUE, J.—The dispute between the parties to this appeal is between two rival purchasers at auction sales. It appears that several persons obtained decrees against one Syed Haider Shah who was one of the zemindars of the village Khanpur. In execution of the decree of one Lachhmi Narain, the zemindari share of Syed Haider Shah was sold and purchased by the plaintiff-respondent. In execution of another decree obtained by one Lakkhi Mal against the same Haider Shah, the property called the kila situate in Khanpur was sold and purchased by the defendant-appellant. The plaintiff-respondent objected to the attachment and sale of the said kila in execution of the decree of Lakkhi Mal, but his objection was disallowed. He then brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, for a declaration that the plaintiff-respondent by virtue of his purchase at auction sale is the owner of the share of Haider Shah in the kila situate in Khanpur. The defendant-appellant resisted the claim on the ground that all that the plaintiff-respondent had purchased at the auction sale, was the zemindari share of Haider Shah. The objection of the appellant was disallowed by the lower Courts and the claim decreed. In appeal, the defendant repeats his plea and contends that all that was sold to and purchased by the plaintiff-respondent at the auction sale of 21st March 1910, was the zemindari share of Haider Shah in Khanpur and that his interest in the kila was expressly excluded from the sale. The Courts below have relied upon the ruling of Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali (1). The facts of that case were that the rights and interests of a zemindar in a certain zemindari village were sold in execution of a decree. At the time of the sale, a certain building stood on the property of the judgment debtor, i. e., in the village that was sold. The question was whether the sale of the zemindari included the sale of the building also. It was held that in the absence of evidence showing that the building was excluded from the sale, the sale of the rights and interests in the zemindari included the sale of the building also. The principle of the case of Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali (1), cannot be applied to the present case, for the reason that there is evidence upon the record to show that the sale of the rights and interests of Haider Shah in Khanpur did not include his interest in the kila. The inventory of the property to be sold, filed by Lachhmi Narayan with his application for execution of decree, mentioned nine lots of property, the first of which was the zemindari share of Haider Shah and the ninth the kila situate in Khanpur. It was in accordance with this application of the decree-holder that the zemindari share of Haider Shah was brought to sale. The order of attachment and the order of dakhaldihani were drawn up in accordance with the inventory filed by the decree-holder, vide papers Nos. 18C, 17D, 131, 141, 153. These documents show that the sale of 21st March 1910, did not pass the interest of Haider Shah in the kila to the plaintiff-respondent. I would, therefore, allow the appeal.

Knox, J.—I fully agree with my learned brother. Neither the precedent of Abu Hasan v. Ramzan Ali (1) nor that of Banke Lal v. Jagat Narain (2) are safe guides in the present case. In the properties which were put to sale, the zemindari share without any specification was sold in the former and in the latter the sale-notification distinctly described the property sold as being 20 biswas with gardens belonging to Ram Sarup and Piare Lal. The respondent cannot show in this case the sale-notification. This is unfortunate and as it was one of the documents upon which his claim rests, if it had been in his favour, he should have taken pains to have it produced and placed before us. The dakhalnama and the sale-certificate upon which he relies, are vague in their terms. Even if we take them as they stand, they do not show that the kila was sold. The lower Courts should have seen to the production of this document. The sale-notification is a most important document, as I have repeatedly pointed out in several of my judgments, when a Court wishes to find out what was sold. I do not think that the lower Courts were justified in arriving at the finding at which they did.

By THE COURT.—Order of the Court is that this appeal is decreed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

The mother and natural guardian of a Hindu minor executed a mortgage of immoveable properties belonging to him. The document did not purport to be executed by her as the guardian of her minor son, but the mortgaged property was described in the document as having been registered in her name as the guardian of her minor son.

Held, that the document was one executed by the mother not in her individual capacity but as the guardian of her minor son and that a suit brought by the minor more than three years after he attained his majority, to set aside the mortgage, was barred by limitation [p 812, col. 1]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Arcot in Appeal Suit No. 160 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Mannargudi in Original Suit No. 144 of 1913.

FACTS.—Certain immoveable properties belonging to a Hindu minor were mortgaged by his mother and natural guardian during his minority. In the body of the document, she was not described as the guardian of the minor but in setting out the description of the mortgaged property, it was described as having been registered in the mother's name as the guardian of her minor son. More than three years after his attaining majority, the son sued to set aside the alienation. The lower Appellate Court held that the suit was barred by limitation and the plaintiff thereupon preferred this second appeal.

Mr. K. P. Shanmugam Pillai, for the Appellants:—The District Judge erred in holding that the suit was barred by limitation. Article 44 of the Limitation Act does not apply to this case. The suit is not to set aside an alienation by the guardian. The document does not purport to have been executed by the mother as the guardian of her minor son. It was executed in her individual capacity and is not, therefore, binding on the plaintiff. Vide Kamakshi Nayakan v. Ramasami Nayakan (1).

Mr. V. Visvanatha Sastriar, for the Respondents:—The decree of the District Judge is quite correct. The mother intended to execute and did execute the document as the guardian of her minor son. The description of the mortgaged property proves this beyond all doubt. There the property is described as belonging to the minor and registered in the mother's name as the guardian of her minor son. In the face of this, it is useless to contend that the mother executed the document in her individual capacity. Vide Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammatt Babooee Munraj Koonweree (2), *Murari v. JUDGMENT.—Following Ranomanvirsaul Panday v. Musammot Babooe Munrai Koonweree (2) and Murari v. Tayana (3), we hold (especially having in view the description of the mortgaged property in Exhibit I as having been registered in the name of the mother as the guardian of her minor son) that that document was executed by her in her capacity as guardian of her son, though she is not so described in the body of the document. The case of Kamakshi Nayakan v. Ramasami Nayakan (1) quoted by the appellants' Counsel has been dissented from in Sivaradevelu Pillay v. Ponnammal (4), and we have no doubt that Article 44 of the Limitation Act applies to this suit and that it was rightly held barred by the District Court. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Khulna dated the 5th April 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Satkhira, dated the 26th of April 1912

Babu Buranashihasi Mukerjee, for the Appellants.

Babys Sarat Chandra Roy Chelchury and Sasadhur Roy (Junior), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a rent suit brought under rather curious circumstances. The plaintiff, a lady, alleging that she purchased the land from the original proprietor, sued her father as a tenant for rent for the last two years of her vendor's incumbency and for the first two years of her possession. The father set up the title in himself and said that he purchased the holding benami in the name of his daughter and leased it out to his son in law—nominally for his daughter. The learned Munsif declined to have anything to do with these conflicting claims and decided that, because the plaintiff had not attempted to collect or collected any rents from her father, the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist. The daughter went in appeal before the learned District Judge, and he held, on a preliminary objection, that the question of the conflicting title to or interest in the land had been decided by the Munsif and that it was competent to him to deal with the appeal and accordingly he dealt with it, and found clearly on the facts that the lady was speaking the truth and was supported up to the hilt by the necessary documents and that the story told by the father was a mere pretence to get rid of his liability.

In appeal before us, it is argued that the decision of the Munsif being simply that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties inasmuch as no rents had ever been collected, was a decision from which there was no appeal, the amount of rent claimed being under Rs. 50. In reply, the learned Vakil for the respondent strenuously argued that this case falls under those exceptional instances which are referred to in two cases reported in 8 Calcutta

ADAPAKA BAPANNA v. INUGANTI RAJAGOPALA.

Wee'ly Notes, one case being Sita Nath Pal v. Kartick Gharm (1), and the other Rani Kanai Dass v. Fakir Chand Dass (2). We are, however, of opinion that the ruling in Shilabati Debi v. Rodrigues (3) which is perfectly general in its terms, applies equally to this case as to every other case in which there has been no actual decision of the conflicting claims or interest in the land.

The learned Vakil took a second point that the suit was for rent immediately after the lady's purchase and that the decision that no rent was collected, was no decision at all and the Munsif had, therefore, failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law and that as the plaintiff had, with the appeal to the District Judge, filed an application under the proviso to section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for revision, the lower Appellate Court was perfectly competent to pass the decision he did. Here, again, we must rule against the respondent on the simple ground that the lower Appellate Court did not act under the proviso, but distinctly found that an appeal did lie and decided the appeal on the merits.

But there is a third ground upon which we are clearly of opinion that the respondent must succeed. It is laid down in the case of Bhagabati Beva v. Nanda Kumar Chuckerbutty (4) that if no appeal lies from a Munsif to a Subordinate Judge, no appeal lies from the Subordinate Judge to this Court and that dictum is expressed in the most general terms and obviously based upon common sense, for, if the first appeal is a nullity, ex hypothesi there cannot be a second appeal. The learned Vakil for the appellant asks us to deal with the matter under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as, no doubt, we are fully empowered to do, even though no application has up to date been made for that purpose. But when we are asked to exercise this extraordinary jurisdiction in revision suo moto it becomes necessary to consider the merits of the case, and on reading the learned Judge's judgment, it is perfectly plain that no good purpose whatever can be served by allowing this unfortunate litigation between a father and daughter to continue. There is the clearest finding, as we have already said, that the lady's story is established both by oral and documentary evidence beyond any doubt, and it is not, in the least, likely that this Court would interfere in revision in the face of such findings of fact by a very experienced District Judge.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed. Under the circumstances, the parties will bear their own costs throughout, and the decree of the lower Court will be modified to that extent.

plaintiff's estate, for recovery of arrears of kattubadi, water-cess, and village-cess for faslies 1320 to 1322, on the ground that the 1st defendant was liable to pay the same for the lands in suit which were carpenter's service inam. The 2nd defendant was added as a mortgagee in possession. The 1st defendant was ex parte. The 2nd defendant contended inter alia that he was not liable to pay the amounts claimed, inasmuch as the lands had been resumed by the Government and granted on patta to the 1st defendant after levying full assessment thereon and that the previous payments, if any, were under a mistake as to the liability of the lands for the charges in dispute and could not give the plaintiff any rightful claim thereto. The District Munsif held, following Sobhanadri Appa Rao v. Gopalkristnamma (1), that the suit lands were liable to pay kattubadi and decreed the suit, reducing the amount of the claim by a few rupees. The 2nd defendant thereupon preferred this civil revision petition.

Mr. B. Somayya, for Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Petitioner:—The decree of the District Munsif is opposed to law. Under section 4 of Madras Regulation XXV of 1802, kattubadi was excluded from consideration in fixing the peishcush payable by a zemindar. The decision in Sobhanadri Appa Rao v. Gopalkristnamma (1), was with reference to the terms of the particular permanent sanad put forward in that case and was not on a construction of section 4 of Madras Regulation XXV of 1802.

Mr. K. S. Aravamudan Iyengar, for the Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—Section 4 of Regulation XXV of 1802 is very awkwardly worded. It speaks of "articles of revenue included . . . under the several heads of" (among other heads) "all other lands paying only favourable quit rents" and excludes those articles of revenue from consideration in fixing the permanent assessment on the basis of the true income of the zemindar. That what was excluded was not the jodi payable to the zemindar by an inamdār but the difference between the jodi and the proper assessment claimable from the lands if they had not been granted in inam, seems to be clear. The Government was concerned only with and, therefore, reserved its powers to deal with this difference and not with the jodi itself. The argument of Mr. Somayya that in Sobhanadri Appa Rao v. Gopalkristnamma (1), the learned Judges decided upon the construction of the particular permanent sanad put forward in that case and not upon the construction of section 4 of the Regulation, cannot be accepted.

There is no other arguable point in this case which is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Before deciding an appeal, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to bring on the record all the necessary parties to the appeal. [p. 815, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a decree for sale was passed in a suit in which a necessary party under Order XXXIV, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code was knowingly omitted from the array of parties in appeal:

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 494 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif of Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 57 of 1912.

FACTS.—This was a suit for sale on a mortgage executed by a dancing girl, instituted after her death. Her three sons and a girl alleged to have been adopted by her, were made parties to the suit. Another girl claiming under a similar adoption was brought in as a supplemental defendant. The Court of first instance passed a decree against the adopted girl. The other girl who claimed under a similar adoption, appealed without making the sons parties to the appeal. The District Court confirmed the decree. This second appeal is by another dancing girl.

Mr. K. Jagannatha Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for Mr. S. Subramania Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Under Order I, rule 10, and section 107, clause (2), of the Code of Civil Procedure, the lower Appellate Court ought to have made the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 parties to the appeal preferred to it, before deciding that appeal. The question may then arise (if it is found that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are co-owners of the equity of redemption with 3rd defendant) whether the appeal was barred. The decree for sale passed in a suit in which a necessary party under Order XXXIV, rule 1 (4th defendant, at any rate, being such a party) was knowingly omitted from the array of parties in appeal, cannot be allowed to stand.

We must set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct the appeal to that Court to be restored to file. The lower Appellate Court will dispose of it afresh after making defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 parties to that appeal. Costs will abide.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 15th January 1915, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Allahabad District, in a case of ejectment under section 58-63 of Act II of 1901.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(August 3rd, 1915.)—Both the lower Courts and the parties hitherto seem to have proceeded on the assumption that section 13 (a) only applies to the case when a tenant who has been wrongfully dispossessed by his land-holder has regained possession thereto within a year from the wrongful dispossession. This is not the case: no limit is therein laid down, although in the similar case under section 14 (1) (a), there is a year's limit when the tenant has been admitted by the land-holder to the tenancy of some other land. It is argued by the respondent that, for reasons which I will discuss later, section 13 (a) only applies when the former tenant has regained possession of the land within six months from the date of his wrongful dispossession. The Assistant Collector has found that Sahai, the predecessor of the present appellant, was not really out of possession at all. The Additional Commissioner has come to no clear finding as to how long Sahai was out of possession although he has found that Gajadhar was given the land for some time or other. I have, therefore, looked into the evidence on this point. The patwari says nothing whatever as to Sahai's wrongful dispossession in 1308 fasli or 1309 fasli and Gajadhar's possession does not seem to have been questioned on this point by the respondent. Gajadhar himself is not very definite, but apparently his statement is that he was in possession for a year. The respondent gives evidence, but as he admits that he wrongfully dispossessed Sahai, his evidence may be disregarded as unworthy of credit.

the Settlement in which there is an attestation by the appellant that he has a non-occupancy tenant of the plot in question. I do not think he can be considered by this to give up claims to occupancy rights based on his predecessor's cultivation. On this evidence, I am not prepared to find that Sahai was six months out of possession.

Under section 168 of the Tenancy Act, section 28 of the Limitation Act of 1908 applies to suits under the Tenancy Act "subject to the provisions of" the latter Act. It is urged that under section 28 of the Limitation Act, six months after the wrongful dispossession the right of the former tenant to the property is extinguished and this is interpreted to mean that his occupancy right is extinguished. I feel some doubt as to whether the words "subject to the provisions of this Act" in section 168, do not bar this interpretation. Moreover if this interpretation is correct, there is a curious inconsistency between section 13 (b) and section 14 (1) (a), for if the former tenant be admitted to the tenancy of other lands, he would have greater privileges than if the former tenant were re-admitted to the possession of the land which he formerly held as tenant. On the other hand, it is pointed out that if there is no six months' limit, there are even greater anomalies, for section 13 (a) would apply even if the tenant re-gained possession of his land more than twelve years after his wrongful dispossession, in which case if there had been a tenant meanwhile, he would also have acquired occupancy rights. For present purposes, however, it is unnecessary for me to decide this question.

I would set aside the order of the Additional Commissioner and restore that of the Assistant Collector, respondent paying costs throughout.

As held in Sornavalli Ammal v. Muthayya Sastrigal (1), and in Rajahah i Saha Banikya v. Behary Lal Basak (2), a suit on an award cannot be considered to be a suit on a contract. As observed in the latter case, it operates to merge and extinguish all claims embraced in the submission, and gives rise to a fresh cause of action, which in the present case is governed by Article 120 of the 1st Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act as there is no other Article applicable. *Kuldip Dube v. Revision against an order of the District Magistrate of Mainpuri.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against the order of the District Magistrate. It appears that there was a suit in the Small Cause Court in 1912 in which Rup Lal was plaintiff. The suit was a suit on a bond. It is alleged that the bond was a forgery. Application was made by the then District Magistrate to the Judge of the Small Cause Court for sanction to prosecute. This sanction was granted and the case was taken cognizance of by the District Magistrate, who sent it on to a Magistrate of the first class. The result of his enquiry was that the accused Rup Lal was discharged. The prosecution considered it desirable that there should be further enquiry and that the propriety of the order of the Magistrate discharging Rup Lal should be considered. The application was made to the District Magistrate. He directed Rup Lal to show cause why the order discharging him should not be set aside. Counsel appeared on behalf of Rup Lal. No exception was taken to the District Magistrate hearing the case and he ordered that the order of discharge should be set aside. In the present application, it is urged that the District Magistrate has all along been the complainant and that the present District Magistrate is the complainant notwithstanding that the original complainant was his predecessor-in-office, and that a District Magistrate who is a complainant ought not to make any order in the case. It is further contended that the order of the Magistrate, who discharged Rup Lal, is correct and ought not to be interfered with.

In my opinion, if the order discharging Rup Lal was wrong, there is no reason why it should not be set aside. But I do not desire to express any opinion on the correctness or incorrectness of the order of discharge. While I think it is to be regretted that the attention of the learned District Magistrate was not called to the fact that he was the nominal complainant, it is nevertheless clear that a Magistrate ought not to make an order in any case in which he is even the nominal complainant. I think that the order should be set aside and it will be for the Crown to consider whether it is expedient to move further in the matter. If it is considered expedient to move, an application can be made to the Sessions Judge who has jurisdiction in the matter. I accordingly set aside the order of the District Magistrate dated the 5th of August 1915.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 512—Accused absconding—No finding by Magistrate that there was no immediate prospect of his arrest—Arrest—Statements of witnesses examined in absence of accused, admissibility of—Conviction, legality of.

A murder was committed in 1897. The accused ran away at that time and was not heard of till he was arrested in 1915. The witnesses were examined in 1897 on behalf of the prosecution to prove the commission of the offence by the accused. The Magistrate, however, did not record any finding that in his opinion the accused had absconded and that there was no immediate prospect of his arrest. The accused was convicted on the evidence recorded in 1897.

Held, that the evidence given in 1897 was inadmissible to prove the guilt of the accused and that the conviction was bad. [p. 819, col. 1.]

Mr. C. Ross Alston, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

RUSTOM V. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.

RAFIQUE, J.—The appellant in this case is one Rustom, who was committed to the Court of Session on the charge of murder under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. During his trial, the learned Sessions Judge added a further charge under section 307, that is, an attempt at murder, and convicting him under that section sentenced him to transportation for life. The murder was committed as long ago as the 3rd of December 1897. The case for the prosecution is that on the night of the 3rd of December 1897, the appellant was driving a camel cart from Farrukhabad. On his arrival at Nandsa, he had to change the camel and asked Sadullah, who was in charge of the camel that was relieved, to help him in the harnessing of the other camel and also to accompany him to the next stage. Sadullah refused to go with the appellant any further, upon which the appellant took up an axe and attacked him with it and inflicted blows on the head which resulted in almost instantaneous death. Rustom, the appellant, then ran away and was not heard of till he was arrested this year, and put on his trial. Soon after the murder, the chaukidar of the place reported the occurrence and the Sub-Inspector proceeded to the spot at once. The case was sent up to the Court on the 24th of December 1897, and on the same date evidence purporting to be taken under section 512 was recorded. Subsequently it was discovered that the proceedings which were taken in 1897 were incomplete and an order was issued to the Police to furnish proper evidence. This was in 1898. A proclamation under section 87 was issued as also a warrant for the arrest of Rustom, both of which were sent to the district of Mainpuri of which district he was a resident. One Ataullah, a constable of the Mainpuri district, was examined on the 16th of August 1898, who deposed to having made a search for the appellant and to having failed to find him. On the 3rd of September 1898, the witnesses who were examined in 1897 were re-examined. Sometime in April 1911, the prosecuting Inspector of Farrukhabad, presumably on going through the old files, came upon the file of this case. He reported that the evidence which purported to have been taken under section 512 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, was not legally correct and recommended that fresh proceedings should be taken. In accordance with his suggestion, the case was again taken up by a Magistrate of the district and formal evidence of the appellant having absconded was recorded and the only surviving witness, Musammât Vilayatan, was examined. These facts we have discovered by going carefully through the files of 1897, 1898 and 1911, which are in the record of this case. The only evidence against the appellant on his trial in the present case consists of the deposition of Musammât Vilayatan who is alive and was examined before the learned Sessions Judge, and the depositions of four other witnesses who were examined in 1897, namely, Imtiazan, Husaini, Mohan and Ram Singh. The learned Sessions Judge, by a formal order dated the 21st of June 1915, brought the statements of the said four witnesses on the record as evidence on behalf of the prosecution. We also find the evidence of the said four witnesses recorded in 1898 on the file of the Sessions Court, though no order appears on the file showing how and when and under what circumstances were those statements brought on the record. The evidence of Musammât Vilayatan as recorded by the learned Sessions Judge at the present trial was rejected by him. The conviction of the appellant rests on the statements of the other witnesses recorded in 1897. The learned Counsel for the appellant contends that the said evidence is inadmissible, inasmuch as no proof of the absconding of the accused had been formally received and recorded prior to the examination of the said witnesses. We think that this objection is valid and must prevail. In section 512, it is distinctly laid down that if it is proved that an accused person has absconded, and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him, the Court competent to try or commit for trial such person for the offence complained of may, in his absence, examine the witnesses (if any) produced on behalf of the prosecution and record their depositions. It is clear from the language of the section that the Court which records the proceedings under it, must first of all record an order that in its opinion, it has been proved that the accused has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of his arrest. No such finding appears on the file of 1897, in fact no evidence was taken in that year to show that the present appellant was absconding and that there was no immediate prospect of his arrest. The evidence of 1897 being inadmissible, the conviction of the appellant on the basis of such evidence cannot stand. But it is suggested on behalf of the Crown that the case should be sent back for re-trial with a direction to the learned Sessions Judge to admit the evidence taken in 1898, inasmuch as that evidence was taken after proof had been received of the absconding of the accused. We find that the only statement in 1898 with regard to the absconding of the accused is that of one Ataulah, a constable of the Mainpuri district. He does not say that there is no immediate prospect of the arrest of the accused, nor is there any finding by the Magistrate that he is satisfied that the accused is absconding and that there is no immediate prospect of his arrest. Moreover, we have considered the evidence of the other witnesses who were examined in 1898 and are of opinion that their evidence is insufficient to bring the charge home to the appellant. Of the witnesses examined in 1898, Musamat Vilayatani cannot be relied upon. Mohan Chamar and Mahomed Yusuf distinctly say that they did not see Rustom, the appellant, strike the deceased. The other witnesses Imtiazan, Ram Singh and Husaini do say that they recognised Rustom as the assailant of the deceased. It should be observed here that none of the witnesses was present actually on the spot when the assault on Sadullah is said to have taken place. All the witnesses say that they ran upon hearing the cries of Sadullah. Imtiazan and Husaini also ran up. It was a dark night and according to Mahomed Yusuf, it was not possible to recognise any person at any distance. There is, therefore, room for doubt as to the evidence of Imtiazan, Husaini and Ram Singh. In our opinion, it would serve no useful purpose to send back the case for re-trial with the direction to admit the evidence taken in 1898. We, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the appellant and acquit him of the offence of which he has been convicted, and direct his immediate release.

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—In this case it has been found upon the evidence that the parties compounded their disputes out of Court. There were three cases which arose out of the disputes between the petitioner and the respondents. In the first of these cases, the petitioner was the accused and in the second case, which was a counter case to the first, the petitioner was the complainant. In the third case, that is, the one in question, the petitioner was the complainant. In the other two cases, the accused were convicted and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment each. Then they appealed to the Joint Magistrate and while the appeals were pending, the parties entered into an agreement that all the disputes between them should be settled. The Joint Magistrate has found that the arrangement settling the disputes extended to the case which was then pending in the Sub-Magistrate's Court. As a result of the compromise, the two appeals in the Appellate Court were compounded with the permission of the Court, and the accused acquitted. When, however, the accused in the present case submitted a petition to the Sub-Magistrate saying that this case also was the subject of the compromise, the complainant, who is the present petitioner, resiled from his former position and denied the composition. The Sub-Magistrate found that as a matter of fact, the present case was not settled. The Appellate Court has, however, taken a different view, and we have no doubt that this view, so far as the finding of fact is concerned, is correct. The question of law then arises, whether the composition or arrangement which was arrived at outside the Sub-Magistrate's Court comes within the terms of section 345, Criminal Procedure Code. Clause 6 of that section says: "The composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused". It does not say as to what should be the procedure if one of the parties, after they settled their disputes outside the Court, refused to abide by it when the case comes on afterwards for hearing. There is only one precedent which covers this case and it is Murray v. Queen-Empress (1). There the learned Judges held, or rather assumed as if the matter admitted of no doubt, that it was competent for the Court in which the charge is pending to take evidence as to whether there was in fact a composition outside the Court. In that case, there was a dispute whether, if there was a composition, it was a valid one or not, having regard to the allegation whether the complainants acted freely and understood what they were doing. The section itself does not throw much light on the question raised before us. I am, however, inclined to take the same view as was taken in Murray v. Queen-Empress (1). Section 345, Criminal

(1) 21 C. 103.

Procedure Code, lays down that certain offences, of which the offence of hurt is one, can be compounded by the parties and no leave of the Court is necessary for this purpose, while of certain other offences such as grievous hurt, there can be no composition without the permission of the Court before which they are pending. Where the parties have actually composed their disputes in the former class of cases, it is not clear on principle, why it should be necessary for the validity of a composition that any petition should be presented or why the parties should afterwards be allowed to withdraw from it. The composition spoken of in section 345 is in the nature of a contract, but I do not think it requires monetary consideration. I may point out, however, in this case there was some consideration, because, there were cases between the parties pending and if there was an arrangement, the consideration was that each party should refrain from pursuing the case or cases in which the other party was the accused. It is true that if a Court is bound to take cognizance of a composition arrived at outside the Court but which has been resiled from by one of the parties when the case came to be tried, the Court will be obliged to take evidence and that will necessarily result in the prolongation of proceedings. But if the Legislature contemplated that a composition should be made in Court, or that a composition arrived at should not be considered to be complete until both parties have expressed their assent in Court whether by means of a petition or otherwise, one would expect that they would have said so. In the absence of any such express provision, the natural interpretation will be that the composition is not limited to acts done in Court, nor to cases in which the parties continue to be of the same mind until the case comes on for further hearing before the Court.

I would hold that there was a valid composition in this case and it had the effect of acquittal.

AYLING, J.—The abstract question as to the effect of an agreement to compound come to by the parties out of Court from which one subsequently resiles, is a somewhat difficult one on which my mind is not free from doubt. The wording of section 345, Criminal Procedure Code, throws little, if any, light on it and I should be loth to express a final opinion on the somewhat one-sided argument that has been addressed to us. The only authority quoted certainly supports the view contended for by Mr. Rangachari. But on the facts found by the Joint Magistrate, I am clearly of opinion that the case is one in which, in the exercise of our discretion, we may very properly decline to interfere. I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Zemindar not actively opposing gang of dacoits, if to be bound over—Witnesses, evidence of, weight of—High Court, power of—Duty of lower Courts.

A zemindar of a village cannot be bound over under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code merely because he did not actively oppose a gang of dacoits. [p. 821, col. 2.]

Where a zemindar, who is also a money-lender, is prosecuted under section 110 and in defence he produces a number of respectable witnesses besides his castemen and tenants, it is not proper for the Magistrate to disbelieve all the witnesses so produced merely on the ground that the accused could by the influence of his position in life produce any number of them. [p. 822 col. 2.]

A High Court is not a Court of appeal in cases under section 110 and the responsibility of administering that section does not rest with it. It is nevertheless, a section which Magistrates ought to administer with the most scrupulous care, both as the Court of first instance and the Appellate Court. A High Court ought not to take upon itself to weigh the evidence given on behalf of one side or the other. It ought only to see whether the Court below has approached the consideration of the appeal in a fair way having regard to the interest not only of the prosecution but also of the accused. [p. 822, col. 1.]

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order of the District Magistrate of Etah, dismissing an appeal of Miharban

Singh against an order of a Magistrate of the first class, directing him to give security to be of good behaviour under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Applicant is a zemindar and money-lender. It appears that a band of very desperate dacoits had as their rendezvous, a place on the banks of the Kali Nadi on the boundaries of Etah and Mainpuri. The gist of the evidence of the Police and unofficial witnesses against the applicant, was that he harboured this band of dacoits. It would rather seem as if it was intended at one time actually to charge the applicant as being a member of the gang; presumably because the necessary evidence was not forthcoming, no substantive proceedings were taken against him. Section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure defines the class of persons against whom an order for security may be made:—

(a) A man who is by habit a robber, house-breaker, or thief, or (b) is by habit a receiver of stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen, or

(c) habitually protects or harbours thieves, or aids in the concealment or disposal of stolen property, or

(d) habitually commits mischief, extortion or cheating or counterfeiting coin, currency notes or stamps, or attempts so to do, or

(e) habitually commits or attempts to commit, or abets the commission of offences involving a breach of the peace, or

(f) is so desperate or dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community.

There is not a particle of evidence that the applicant comes under any part of this section except a portion of (c), namely, that he habitually protects or harbours thieves. There is not even any allegation that he was in the habit of concealing or disposing of stolen property. The evidence, such as it is, is confined to his alleged association with a particular gang which had made, as I said before, its rendezvous in the neighbourhood of his village. It must be borne in mind that neither the applicant nor any of his villagers could be bound over under this section merely because they did not actively oppose the dacoits. It would be very well if zemindars and others recognised their duty and had the courage to give assistance to the Police when gangs of dacoits settled in their neighbourhood, but their omission to do so, does not render them liable under section 110. There is no evidence that the applicant was in the "habit" of harbouring or protecting thieves. There is a good deal of evidence from which, if unrebutted, it might well be inferred that he assisted the gang in question. The prosecution examined a number of witnesses who said that the accused harboured these particular dacoits. One witness said that he had seen them at the house of the applicant, and one witness said that he had fed them. One of the prosecution witnesses, namely, Thamman Singh, while deposing against the accused, said that he had heard that he was a man of good character. No witness was produced on behalf of the prosecution from the accused's own village. The accused produced 46 witnesses, most of them from his own village including the headman and patwari and the headman of a neighbouring village.

This Court is not a Court of Appeal in cases under section 110 and the responsibility of administering that section does not rest with the High Court. It is nevertheless a section which Magistrates ought to administer with the most scrupulous care, both the Court of first instance and the Appellate Court. Magistrates ought always to bear in mind that the indirect results of binding a man over under section 110 may be very terrible and that there is always the possibility of the section being abused. In the present appeal I do not think that I ought to take upon myself to weigh the evidence given on behalf of one side or the other. I ought only to see whether the Court below has approached the consideration of the appeal in a fair way having regard to the interest not only of the prosecution but also of the applicant. The learned District Magistrate has discarded the evidence of all the witnesses produced by the accused who were his tenants or his fellow-castemen. It may perhaps be urged that when the question at issue is the good or bad character of an individual, the evidence of his fellow castemen ought not to be discarded solely on the ground that the witnesses are his fellow-castemen. The learned District Magistrate proceeds:—"There still remains a large number of others against whom no allegation can be made. The easy course in such cases is simply to say that there is no reason to distrust them and that they must, therefore, be believed. I do not, however, think it is right to do so. The evidence for the prosecution has raised a very strong prima facie case against the appellant and he has to rebut it. As the Deputy Magistrate observes: 'It is never a matter of difficulty for a man who has the influence of a gang of dacoits at his back and is at the same time a zemindar and money-lender to produce as much evidence as he wants, and the production of 46 witnesses by the appellant does not, therefore, mean that he is of good character. The forces of evil are by no means to be ignored. If they were, we should not be troubled with an outbreak of crime like dacoity.' Appellant has, I think, made full use of his influence to bring up evidence, and has had the help of his position and also no doubt of the aforementioned Misri Lal, whose election to the post of lambardar he was instrumental in securing. This influence has probably prevented the production of purely local evidence, the absence of which is one of the points made by the appellant." It seems to me that this was not a fair way of dealing with the evidence of witnesses whom no reason could be given for disbelieving. The only reason suggested by the learned District Magistrate is that the applicant had a gang of dacoits at his back. It seems to me that this means that he disbelieved the evidence adduced by the accused because he was guilty. In other words, he convicted the man first. The learned Magistrate said that the accused had to rebut "the strong prima facie case made against him." How could he rebut the case otherwise than by producing a large number of witnesses "against whom no allegation could be made." The learned District Magistrate has, in my opinion, given no legitimate reason for disbelieving the evidence of a large number of persons who deposed to the good character of the applicant, persons residing in his own village and in the immediate neighbourhood. I cannot help feeling that where a person is of a notoriously bad character, he will as a general rule find difficulty in producing respectable honest persons to depose to his good character. It may possibly be that the applicant in the present case and all his fellow-villagers are little better than the gang of dacoits who made the neighbourhood their meeting place, but this was not the case made either by the Police or by any of the witnesses for the prosecution and it is not the reason which the learned District Magistrate gives for disbelieving a large number of witnesses produced by the applicant and who were not shown to be in any way under his influence either as tenants or even as fellow-castemen. In my opinion the learned District Magistrate did not approach the consideration of the appeal from a proper point of view, and on this account I think the order ought to be set aside. I accordingly allow the application, set aside the order of both the Courts below and direct the bail bond to be cancelled.

Application allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Judicial proceeding—Statement made to District Magistrate in his executive capacity, if complaint—Oath, administration of.

P, a village headman made a petition to the District Magistrate in which he stated that he wished to resign his post as the headman. On enquiry by the District Magistrate as to the reason of his resignation, he stated that during the course of a Police investigation in a dacoity case, the Police were forcing a large number of people to pay money to them. The Magistrate reduced his statement to writing and sent for the persons named by him. The Magistrate recorded the statements of all of them on oath and sent the case to the Police Superintendent to take action under paragraph 283 of the Police Regulations. The Superintendent reported that the allegations were entirely false. The District Magistrate then ordered the prosecution of P and other persons whom he had examined on oath for giving false evidence.

Held, that the statement made by P to the District Magistrate was not a complaint, nor the action taken by the Magistrate was in the course of a judicial proceeding, in the course of which he was legally empowered to administer an oath, and that, therefore, the Magistrate had no power to take action under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 824, col. 2.]

Mr. Pease Lal Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The present application has arisen from the following facts:—One Paras Ram, a village headman, on the 17th of February last filed before the District Magistrate a petition in which he stated that he wished to resign his post as village headman as he was too old and unable to do his work. The District Magistrate apparently doubted the correctness of the reason given and questioned the man. In reply to questions put to him, the man stated that the Police of a certain Police station were investigating a dacoity case and in the course of their investigation they were forcing a large number of people to pay money to them, that he was afraid of getting into trouble through this matter and he, therefore, wished to resign. The District Magistrate in his explanation states that he treated this as a complaint and he thereupon put Paras Ram on oath and examined him again. What he stated was then reduced to writing. On completion of his statement, the Magistrate gave a rukarto to a chaprasi of his Court, which contained the names of 12 persons, and in this he directed the aforesaid chaprasi to produce the persons named therein before him at once. Apparently the chaprasi obeyed orders and produced all these persons. These persons are those whose names were mentioned by Paras Ram in the course of his statement as being connected in some way or other with the alleged extortion. The District Magistrate then recorded the evidence of all these persons on oath. Having proceeded so far, he then sent the papers to the Superintendent of Police with directions to him to take action under paragraph 383 of the Police Regulations. This paragraph lays down that before a Superintendent punishes any Police officer departmentally or prosecutes him criminally, he must make an enquiry, reduce the substance of the accusation to the form of a charge and record the officer's explanation using a certain form. After completing these proceedings, if he considers that further steps should be taken, he should decide whether the officer ought to be criminally prosecuted or departmentally punished. If he decides to institute a prosecution, he must send the papers to the District Magistrate, and obtain his concurrence before taking further action, whatever the rank of the officer accused may be. The Superintendent of Police made an enquiry and submitted a report to the District Magistrate to the effect that the allegations of extortion were entirely false and suggested that the person who had made them and reported them, should be criminally prosecuted. Thereupon the District Magistrate passed an order purporting to be one under section 476, directing the prosecution of the present applicants and certain others including Paras Ram, the latter to be prosecuted for an offence under section 211, the others to be prosecuted for offences under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. It is against this action of the District Magistrate that the present revision has been presented. It is contended, and I must say with considerable force, that Paras Ram made no complaint; that he did not intend to make any complaint; that he called no witnesses and the proceeding before the District Magistrate was not a judicial proceeding in the course of which he was legally empowered to administer an oath. The explanation of the District Magistrate is that he treated what Paras Ram said, as a complaint and that the enquiry that he made, was under section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The only unfortunate point in this explanation is that a complaint means an allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Code that some person has committed an offence. It is not open to the District Magistrate to treat this petition and statement of Paras Ram as a complaint whether Paras Ram liked or not. It may be of course that Paras Ram wished to make a complaint in such a form that if subsequently it was found to be false, he should be able to save himself from a criminal prosecution. If there was evidence in the case to indicate that Paras Ram intended the Magistrate to take action under the Code against the Police officers, I should not hesitate for an instant in holding that the Magistrate had power to treat the petition as a complaint and that he was justified in sending for the witnesses and examining them on oath. But an examination of the record shows that Paras Ram's petition was simply a petition tendering his resignation; that even in his statement taken on oath, which statement was made in reply to questions put by the District Magistrate, he made allegations of fact and at the end, stated that these were his reasons for resigning his post. He nowhere asked for the witnesses to be summoned. He nowhere asked for an enquiry to be made and I may add that if the Magistrate was knowingly acting under section 202, it is curious that on completion of his enquiry, he should send the complaint to the Superintendent of Police with a view to the latter officer taking action under paragraph 383 of the Police Regulations. It is also curious that up to the present time the District Magistrate has passed no order dismissing the complaint. Looking at the circumstances of the case, I find it impossible to hold that Paras Ram made a complaint to the District Magistrate; that is to say, that the allegation was made with a view to the Magistrate taking action under the Criminal Procedure Code against the Police officers who were said to have committed the extortion. Paras Ram may perhaps have given false information to the District Magistrate in reply to his questions. The point which I have to decide is whether or not there was a complaint, within the true meaning of the word, before the District Magistrate. In my opinion there was no such complaint. The action of the Magistrate was not action taken under section 202 of the Code. It was apparently executive action in the form of a departmental enquiry which was continued by the further enquiry made under paragraph 383 of the Police Regulations. There was no judicial proceedings before the District Magistrate and, therefore, he had no power to take action under section 476, and the present applicant is one of those whose prosecution for perjury has been directed, and it cannot be said that he committed perjury in the course of a departmental enquiry. No oath ought to have been administered to him at all. I would point out that throughout the enquiry made by the District Magistrate, he nowhere mentioned that he was taking action under any specific section. If, as the District Magistrate says, the unfortunate Police officers will not have an opportunity of clearing their character, they will have only the District Magistrate to blame for their unfortunate position, though perhaps it is still open to the District Magistrate to prosecute Paras Ram for giving false information. I allow the application, set aside the order of the District Magistrate and quash the proceedings.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Melar, in Calendar Case No. 7 of 1915.

Mr. T. Arumainatham, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.—This petition was admitted by Mr. Justice Napier on the ground that he was unable to find any evidence set out against any of the accused.

The judgment though long is very unsatisfactory. Though 12 persons were charged with offences under sections 147 and 504 of the Indian Penal Code, there has not been the slightest attempt made by the Magistrate to view the case of each separately or to discuss the evidence as against each of the accused. This was all the more necessary as the evidence against each of the accused is by no means equally strong. The whole judgment is a detailed criticism of the defence case and seems to proceed on the view that it was for the accused to establish their innocence.

Though the accused were charged with rioting, the common object is not set out in the charge and it is by no means clear from the evidence what the common object was. According to the complainant, the accused threatened him with injury in the evening. Accused Nos. 1 to 9 then went at about 10 p. m. to his house in order to take away the petition which he had written to the District Superintendent of Police. They could not have known that he was going to write the petition when they threatened him. The immediate cause of the assault in this case was his abuse of the accused and their assaulting each other.

There can be little doubt that in cases of rioting the common object should be clearly and specifically set out in the charge. I need only refer to Behari Mahton v. Queen-Empress (1), Sabir v. Queen-Empress (2) and Poresh Nath Sircar v. Emperor (3).

In the present case, the charge simply states that the accused were guilty of rioting. The accused complained during the trial that the charge did not state what the common object was and I cannot say that they were not prejudiced by the omission in the charge. The accused are not charged with having trespassed upon complainant's property and taken away his complaint or with having assaulted his wife. If after all this took place, the complainant abused first accused as they were assaulting each other and the other accused with a view to rescue first accused intervened, it is difficult to see how they can be guilty of rioting. The question of the common object is not "clear as crystal" as the Magistrate supposes.

HAKIM SINGH v. EMPEROR.

I set aside the conviction and sentence. As regards accused Nos. 7 to 9, 11 and 12, I do not think it necessary to order a re-trial. The evidence is satisfactory and the Public Prosecutor does not press the case. Accused Nos. 1 to 6 will be re-tried before such other Magistrate as the District Magistrate might direct.

Where proceedings under section 110 are taken against a person and he is able to produce witnesses on his behalf to speak of his good character, the Court ought to pay particular attention to such evidence. Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate of Mainpuri.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose and Uma Shalker Bajpai, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The five appellants Hakim Singh, Dal Singh, Gandharp Singh, Hukam Singh, and Khem Singh have been ordered to furnish security under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. All five are thakurs. Hukam Singh and Dal Singh reside in one village, the other three in another village. Hukam Singh and Dal Singh have been represented by Mr. Bajpai, whilst the other three applicants have been represented by Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose. They were separately represented in the Court below also. I have gone carefully through the evidence on both sides. The learned District Magistrate in confirming the order of the Court below says:—"There is no doubt that the Magistrate has admitted a great deal of evidence which was quite inadmissible, for instance, the evidence of suspicions without any tangible ground having been stated for these suspicions, also second hand evidence or mere hearsay about what some person told another person and that person not being produced as a witness and so forth." He then proceeds to say that in dealing with the evidence for the prosecution, he will eliminate all such evidence. All the applicants are possessed of some zemindari and cultivation. Of course, it by no means follows that because a man is the owner of some zemindari, he is not a badmash. At the same time the fact that he has some property and position ought to be taken into consideration when dealing with a person under the provisions of section 110. The evidence, in my opinion, given in the Court of first instance, was very unsatisfactory and very vague. The statements were made against all seven persons who were then charged in a "lump." Witness after witness says "all these persons are bad characters." The Magistrate ought to see that the witness is really speaking and has reason for speaking against each. If I were trying the case as a Court of first instance, I hardly think that I would feel justified, on the evidence, in binding the accused over under section 110; at the same time I must bear in mind that this is not the Court upon whom rests the responsibility of administering the provisions of section 110, I can only deal with the case in revision. Accordingly unless I can find some substantial grounds for thinking that the Court below has gone astray, I ought not to interfere. In the present case, I think such grounds do exist. The Court below has wiped out all the evidence that was given on behalf of Hukam Singh and Dal Singh simply because it was of opinion that the thakurs had held a panchayat in connection with this case. It seems to have thought that it necessarily follows that the evidence given in support of the good character of the applicants was false because it was the result of a panchayat. No doubt it might happen that the thakurs would take up the case of the accused and come to a decision to support them at all hazards, quite irrespective of the merits. On the other hand, it might very well be that the thakurs of the neighbourhood might have reason to think that their fellow-castemen were not being fairly treated and that all that they did, was to lend support to witnesses ready to come forward and to speak the truth. I have a great dislike to lay down any hard and fast rule as to how cases under section 110 should be dealt with. Each case should be dealt with on its own facts and circumstances. I think, however, one rule may very safely be laid down, and that is this. Where proceedings under section 110 are taken against a person and he is able to produce witnesses on his behalf to speak of his good character, the Court ought to pay particular attention to such evidence. I do not mean to say that it should necessarily be believed, but the Court should find substantial reason for not believing the evidence before it makes an order. Badmashes who happen to be rich or influential may, of course, be able to procure false evidence as to their character. But speaking generally, I think a person who really is a notorious bad character would find considerable difficulty in getting a large number of his neighbours to come forward and speak to his good character. In the present case, after carefully reading the judgments of both the Courts of first instance and of the District Magistrate, I am of opinion that proper attention has not been paid to the evidence which all of the five applicants adduced. Under the special circumstances of this case, I think that the order both of the Magistrate and of the District Magistrate should be set aside. I accordingly allow the application, set aside the order of both of the Courts below and the accused will be released if in custody. If they have given security, such security will be cancelled.

A Court can pass an order under section 517 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure as regards the disposal of property only if it appears that an offence has been committed with respect to it, or that it has been used for the commission of an offence. [p. 827, col. 2; p. 828, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, an accused was found to be a habitual thief and was bound down for good behaviour, but it did not appear that any offence had been committed with respect to the property in dispute which the accused claimed as his own:

Mr. P. R. Grant, for the Government.

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—In this case, the accused is found to be a habitual thief and has been bound down for good behaviour. Certain properties, a sum of Rs. 32-2-0, some jewels and a silk towel were found in his possession. The Magistrate who originally tried the case, ordered that the property should be returned to the accused, as it did not appear to him that any offence had been committed with respect to the property and as the accused claimed the property as his own. The District Magistrate, however, ordered that the property should be confiscated to the Government, acting under section 517 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. But that section empowers him to pass an order as regards the disposal of the property if it appears that any offence has been committed with respect to it or that it has been used for the commission of an offence. There is no finding here that an offence has been committed or that it appeared from the record that an offence has been committed with respect to

it. Therefore, section 517 (1) has no application in the case and the District Magistrate's order is not covered by that section. His order must, therefore, be set aside and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order should be restored, directing that the property be returned to the accused.

AYLING, J. —The accused claims the property as his own. There is no evidence as to ownership. I do not think that this is a case in which it can be said that it appears that an offence has been committed in respect of the property; and it is only on that ground that the District Magistrate would be justified in passing the order he did. I agree with my learned brother in the order proposed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—Theft—Dishonest removal of property out of another man's possession to be proved.

Before an accused can be found to be guilty of the offence of theft, it must be found that he dishonestly took some property out of the possession of another person.

Where a tenant believing that a legal distraint had been made by his landlord of the crops of his holding which had been previously attached in execution of a decree against him cut and removed the crops:

Held, that the tenant was not guilty of theft inasmuch as he could not be said to have dishonestly taken the property out of the possession of any other person.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge of Budaun.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that a decree was obtained against certain tenants. The karinda of the landlord purported to distraint the crops which had been attached in execution of the decree. The cultivators then cut and carried away the crops. They were charged under section 379 with having committed theft and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment each. The learned Sessions Judge, on the matter coming up before him in revision, thought that the fact that the landlord had distrained the crops, made this subsequent cutting and taking away of the crops by the accused lawful. He considered that this would be so, notwithstanding that the distraint might have been more or less collusive between the landlord and his tenants. He, therefore, thought that the accused were wrongly convicted. The learned Magistrate has explained that in his opinion, distraint having been made by an agent who was not authorised in writing, was illegal, and that, therefore, the illegal distraint could not justify the removal of the crops. The learned Sessions Judge points out that the distress was held to be lawful by the Revenue Court. In my opinion, it is unnecessary to decide whether or not the distress was lawful. A landlord who has rent due to him is entitled to distraint notwithstanding that the result of the distraint may be in whole or in part to defeat the execution of the decree. Before the accused could be found to be guilty of the offence of theft, it must be found that they dishonestly took the property out of the possession of another person. If the present accused believed that a legal distraint had been made by their landlord and in such belief cut and removed the crops, I do not think that they could be said to have "dishonestly" taken the property out of the possession of any other person. The accused, of course, are entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt and I think it may very well have been that the accused in the present case honestly believed that the distraint had been made by their landlord. I set aside the convictions and sentences passed upon the accused. If they are in prison, they will be released. If they are on bail, they and their sureties will be released.

ORDER. - It is unnecessary for us to decide whether the Deputy Magistrate could have reviewed his order directing that the jewels should be given over on the joint receipt of the mother and the daughter, who are the disputants in this case. After that order was passed, a competent Civil Court has decided in a suit instituted by the mother that the jewels belonged to the daughter, who is the petitioner before us.
That being so, there is no merit in support of the application made to the learned Sessions Judge asking him to set aside the Deputy Magistrate's order, who in conformity to the decision of the Civil Court had passed the second order directing that the jewels be returned to the petitioner. We have got ample powers under section 520 of the Criminal Procedure Code to pass any order which may be just on the facts of the case.
There can be no doubt that justice requires that the jewels should be returned to the petitioner. That being so, the order of the learned Sessions Judge will be set aside and the jewels will be returned to the petitioner.Petition allowed; Order set aside.

with intent to defraud, and wrote on three of such acchials false numbers with like intent. He was tried at one trial, for all these counts and convicted under sections 409 and 477 A, Indian Penal Code.Held, that there was misjoinder of the various charges amounting to an illegality which vitiated the trial. [p. 830, col. 2.]Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge of Banda.Mr. Peary Lal Banerji (with him Mr. K.
N. Agate), for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerjee, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Kalka Prasad was charged with offences under sections 409 and 477A of the Indian Penal Code. He was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment under section 409 and to three years' rigorous imprisonment under section 477A together with a fine of Rs. 4,000, the sentences to run concurrently. Kalka Prasad has appealed and it has been argued on his behalf that there was a misjoinder of charges, contravening the provisions of section 223 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which provides that (save as therein mentioned) there shall be a separate charge for every offence and that every such charge should be tried separately. The charge in the Court below against the accused was

PAMPALLI SUBBAREDDI v. CHAUDUBOYIGARI KAMAL SAIB.

that he being the tahvildar embezzled a sum of Rs. 3,991-7-11 and further that he omitted to enter arzrisals Nos. 1-120 with intent to defraud, and wrote on three of such arzrisals false numbers with like intent. The allegation is that it was his duty when receiving money, to take a form of tender from the person paying him the money. This document is called an arzrisal. He has to enter in his book the particulars contained in the arzrisal. It is alleged that in order to cover his defalcations he omitted to make these entries in respect of arzrisals Nos. 1-120, and that with like intent, he put false numbers on three of these documents. It is contended on behalf of the accused that while having regard to the provisions of section 222 (clause 2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is allowable in the charge to state the gross sum which has been misappropriated, there is no similar provision which permits more than three charges under section 477A to be joined together. It is contended that the accused (if the allegations of the prosecution are true) committed a separate offence every time he omitted to enter the particulars of each one of the arzrisals in his book. It is further contended that the joinder of the count for misappropriation with the count for falsification, is contrary to law inasmuch as the charge or charges under section 477A are connected with alleged defalcations more extensive than the charge under section 409. Reliance is placed upon the recent ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council, in which it was held that the joinder of charges in contravention of the provisions of section 233, is something more than an irregularity and vitiates the trial. I think the contention has force. Supposing in the present case there had only been charges under section 477A, it seems to me that there would have been a misjoinder of charges. The omission to enter the particulars of the arzrisals in the book of the accused, was for the purpose of concealing the alleged misappropriation of a distinct sum in each case. As the law stands, only three such offences can be joined and tried at the same trial. In this respect charges under section 477A, differ from charges under section 409. I do not think that section 235 applies. The case was not that of making a number of false entries in various books, etc., to conceal one misappropriation. No doubt there was a similarity in the acts alleged to have been committed by the accused, and it is alleged that the transactions all took place within three days. Nevertheless, it seems to me that if the accused did what he was charged with, he committed a separate offence on each occasion for which he was liable to a separate conviction and sentence. Notwithstanding that I consider that the accused was in no way prejudiced by the way in which the charges were framed, nevertheless, there was in my opinion an illegality which vitiates the trial. I accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that there be a new trial after charges have been framed according to law.

Appeal allowed; Re-trial ordered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 203—Order dismissing complaint not set aside—Subsequent complaint on same facts, whether can be entertained by another Magistrate.

The fact that an order dismissing a complaint under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code has not been set aside, is no bar to another Magistrate entertaining a subsequent complaint on the same facts. [p. 831, col. 1.]

Mr. K. Subba Reddy, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

Mr. K. Kotti Reddi, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The ruling in Mahomed Abdul Menon v. Panduranga Row (1), is in favour of petitioners' contention that when a complaint has been dismissed under section 203, Code of Criminal Procedure, no Magistrate can entertain the same complaint until the order of dismissal is set aside by a competent authority. This view was overruled in Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa Gounden (2) so far as entertainment of a complaint a second time by the same Magistrate is concerned, and the principle on which the case in Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa Gounden (2), was decided is applicable also to a case taken up a second time by a different Magistrate. It is clearly explained by Sir Francis W. Macleann, C. J., in Queen-Empress v. Dolegobind Das (3) and I entirely agree with the reasoning.

In this case, therefore, I hold that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had jurisdiction to entertain the complaint and dismiss this petition.

In the absence of corroboration in material particulars, it is not safe to convict on a retracted confession, unless, from the peculiar circumstances in which it was made and judging from the reasons, alleged or apparent, of the retraction, there remains a high degree of certainty that the confession, notwithstanding its having been resiled from, is genuine. [p. 832, col. 2.]

Held, that the conviction was bad. [p. 832, col. 2.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, K. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by Khushi who has been convicted by the Sessions Judge, Gujranwala, of the murder of Ghulam Muhammad, lambardar of Ghagoki, on the 16th December 1913 and has been sentenced to transportation for life. Allah Jowaya and Hayat were also tried along with the appellant, but were acquitted by the Court below.

In this case, a conditional pardon was given to Khushi by the District Magistrate, Major Coldstream, who recorded his statement on the 23rd December 1913. In that statement, Khushi gave a full account of how the murder was committed and implicated Allah Jowaya, Hayat and Rahman, son of Mehra. When the case came before the Committing Magistrate on the 7th January 1914, Khushi retracted his previous statement and said that he made it on account of having been ill-treated by the Police. His pardon was accordingly revoked and the statement made by him on the 23rd December 1913, has now been taken in evidence against him under section 339 (2), Criminal Procedure Code.

It is unnecessary for us to recapitulate the facts which are fully set forth in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge. It is sufficient to say that the main evidence against the appellant and his co-accused was (1) track evidence, (2) evidence as to the finding of the body, and (3) the presence of blood on the clothes of Allah Jowaya and Hayat. As to the track evidence, there is a conflict and the Sessions Judge remarked that he could attach but the slightest value to that evidence. As to the finding of the body, it has been pointed out in the judgment of the Sessions Judge that it is not clearly proved that any of the accused gave the clue which led to the recovery of the body. On the contrary, it appears that Fazal Dad and Rahman, son of Massu, who are said to have disposed of the body after the murder, gave the clue which led to its discovery. The final result arrived at by the Sessions Judge is that there is no reliable evidence against Khushi, except the statement recorded by Major Coldstream on the 23rd December 1913 which was retracted by him at the earliest opportunity thereafter. The Sessions Judge remarks towards the end of his judgment that "the onus lies heavily on Khushi to show why his retracted statement should not be accepted as true". We are not prepared to accept this view of the law. It has been held by several High Courts that such a retracted statement should not be accepted unless there is something to show that it is true.

Mr. Shafi on behalf of the appellant has cited numerous rulings which show how reluctant the High Courts in India and this Court are to convict an accused person upon a retracted confession which is uncorroborated by other evidence, and argues that a fortiori the Court should not convict upon a statement made by an accused person under a promise of pardon subsequently retracted, a statement which would not be admissible as a confession by reason of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act inasmuch as it was induced by a promise of pardon. In Jawan v. Emperor (1), the previous rulings as to the value of retracted confessions were examined and certain propositions were laid down.

The 4th of these is that "experience and common sense show that, in the absence of corroboration in material particulars, it is not safe to convict on a confession, unless, from the peculiar circumstances in which it was made and judging from the reasons, alleged or apparent, of the retraction, there remains a high degree of certainty that the confession, notwithstanding its having been resiled from, is genuine". We accept this proposition and think it would be very unsafe in the present case to maintain the conviction of Khushi, which is based upon his retracted statement uncorroborated by any other evidence whatsoever.

Not only is his statement not corroborated, but the evidence of Fazal Dad, Rahman, son of Massu, Pira and Umra, who were called as witnesses by the Court, contradicts it in important particulars. We find ourselves quite unable to say whether Khushi actually took part in this murder or not. He does not appear to have had any strong motive such as Allah Jowaya and Hayat are said to have had, but he was suspected from the very beginning and may have known something about it. Under the circumstances, he may have thought that the making of such a statement was the best way to ensure freedom from Police annoyance and from a long detention in the lock-up pending a judicial investigation.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the conviction and sentence acquit Khushi and direct that he be released from custody.

Appeal accepted; Accused acquitted.

Custom, allegation as to, nature of—Issue as to custom, contents of—Pleadings in India—Practice—Issue, ambiguity as to, when can be raised—Hindu Law—Joint family—Impartible zemindari—Members living separately in different houses in same compound, how far evidence of division—Separate possession and enjoyment of property and discontinuance of allowances by zemindar, if evidence of partition—Inheritance—Succession to impartible zemindari—Illegitimate son, widow and step-brother of deceased, contest between—Preference—Separate property of zemindar—Illegitimate son and widow, if share equally—Release by mother of Hindu minor—Consideration inadequate—No independent advice—Absence of dispute—Validity of release—Family settlement—Custom—Gandharva form of marriage, if valid among Kambala caste—Illegitimate son, right of, to share in his father's property in Kambala caste—Illegitimate son, share of, measure of.

Though, as a general rule, a party who relies upon a custom, must allege it with distinctness and certainty, it is not possible or desirable in India in all cases to pin down the parties to the precise form of their pleadings. [p. 834, col. 2.]

The mere fact that a defendant did not object to witnesses for the plaintiff giving evidence in support of a custom set up in a case, does not estop him from objecting to similar evidence being given by another witness on a subsequent date on the ground that it was "beyond the scope of the case in the face of the wording" of the issue on the point. [p. 834, col. 2.]

As a matter of scientific pleading, an issue in a case regarding a custom set up therein and the allegations in the plaint on which the issue is based, ought to contain particulars of the custom upon which the plaintiff seeks to rely at the trial. [p. 835, col. 1.]

Though in cases where an issue is ambiguous and capable of a wider as well as a narrower interpretation and the parties have, in their conduct of the case in its earlier stages, interpreted it in the narrower sense, they will not afterwards be permitted to contend at the latest stage of the case that the wider interpretation ought to be followed; yet where the contention is raised at an earlier stage, it is desirable to give the parties an opportunity of contesting the case upon the wider interpretation of the issue. [p. 835, cols. 1 & 2.]

Separate living of different branches of a joint Hindu family in different houses in the same compound is no evidence of division among the branches. It does not inevitably follow from separate possession and enjoyment of property that the family is divided, nor does discontinuance of allowances which have been paid to members of his family by a zemindar justify that conclusion. [p. 838, cols. 1 & 2; p. 843, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the last holder of an impartible zemindari belonging to a joint Hindu Sadri family died leaving behind him a widow, an illegitimate son and his step-brother:

Held, that so far as the zemindari was concerned the illegitimate son was excluded by the brother of the deceased zemindar but that as regards the separate property of the zemindar not forming part of the zemindari, the illegitimate son was entitled to share equally with the widow. [p. 840, col. 1; p. 841, cols. 1 & 2; p. 849, col. 2.]

Pacithi v. Thiruvallai, 10 M. 334, followed.

The mother of a Hindu minor, purporting to act as his guardian, relinquished his claim to a zemindari which was of considerable value, on receipt of comparatively insignificant properties. It did not appear that she had obtained any legal advice as to the right of the minor to the zemindari. At the time this arrangement was made, there was no active dispute or question raised as to the minor's title to the zemindari.

Held, that the release was not binding on the minor as it was beyond the powers of the guardian and that it was not valid even as a family settlement. [p. 840, col. 1; p. 844, col. 2.]

There is no custom obtaining among the Kambala caste excluding an illegitimate son from inheriting property which would devolve upon him under the ordinary law. [p. 848, col. 2.]

A plaintiff suing for exclusive possession of a zemindari can be given a decree for the share he may be found entitled to in the separate property of the zemindar. [p. 840, col. 2; p. 845, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura (West), dated the 14th day of October 1905, in Original Suit No. 31 of 1902.

FACTS.—The suit was for the recovery of possession of the zemindari of Bodinayakanur with all its appurtenances, on the ground that the plaintiff, as the son of the late zemindar by a woman who was married to him in the gandharva form (which form of marriage was customary among the Kambala caste to which the zemindar belonged), was entitled to succeed thereto in preference to the widow and the step-brother of the deceased. The claim was resisted inter alia on the grounds that the plaintiff's mother was not legally married by the late zemindar but was only kept as his concubine, that she belonged to quite a different caste, that it was not customary in the caste to marry a woman in the gandharva form, that the plaintiff was only an illegitimate son of the late zemindar and as such, was not entitled to succeed to the zemindari and its appurtenances, that the late zemindar, by his last Will and testament, had bequeathed the zemindari and his other properties to the 1st defendant, that during the plaintiff's minority, his (the plaintiff's) mother, acting as his guardian and in consideration of certain properties received by her on his behalf, had released whatever rights he might have had in the zemindari in favour of the widow and that the suit was in consequence not sustainable. The Subordinate Judge of Madura, who tried the case, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed.

VISWANATHASWAMI NAIRER V. KAMULU AMMAL.

[This appeal was first heard by Sir Charles Arnold White, Chief Justice, and Ayling, J.].

JUDGMENT.

WHITE, C. J.—We have had some doubt as to what is the proper course for us to adopt in this case. But we have come to the conclusion that it is desirable that we should have before us, in dealing with the appeal, the evidence which the learned Subordinate Judge thought he ought to exclude with reference to the custom which the plaintiff sought to establish at the trial of this suit. Now it may well be, as Mr. Visvanadhier, the learned Subordinate Judge before whom the case came in its earlier stages, observed in his order of the 22nd July 1904, that the custom referred to in paragraph 4 of the plaint, could not be construed as referring to the custom which the Judge describes in the earlier part of his order. If we turn to the plaint, we find certain allegations of fact in paragraph 3, but no allegation as to the legal results that flow from these facts if the facts were established by evidence. We have no reference to the custom in paragraph 3. In paragraph 4, we have a reference to an alleged custom obtaining among the caste and to an alleged custom obtaining in the zemindari. And, as I have said, it may very well be that the custom which was present to the mind of the Pleader who drafted this plaint, was a custom as alleged in paragraph 4, and not a custom in connection with the allegations made in paragraph 3.

No doubt, as a general rule, a party who relies upon a custom must allege it with distinctness and certainty. Speaking for myself, however, I do not think it is possible or desirable in all cases in this country to pin the parties down to the precise form of their pleadings. If we were to deal with this question, having regard to the precise form of the pleadings, I feel bound to confess that one would have considerable difficulty in adopting a view different from that taken by Mr. Visvanadhier.

When we turn to the course which events took at the trial, we find that the 18th witness for the plaintiff on the 8th April 1904, gave evidence in support of the custom upon which the plaintiff now relies and no objection was taken to that evidence. On the 14th July, another witness gave evidence in support of the custom and no objection was taken to it. It was not until the 15th July, when the 26th witness for the plaintiff gave evidence that 'a Kambala can take as his wife a virgin without marriage rites', that objection was taken on behalf of the 1st defendant to the admissibility of this evidence on the ground that it was "beyond the scope of the case in the face of the wording of the second issue" and that objection was upheld. I do not suggest, of course, that because the defendant did not object to the evidence of the witness given in April, he was estopped from objecting to the evidence to a similar effect given by another witness in July. But it seems to me, in deciding whether in the exercise of the discretion we shall have this further evidence, it is material to observe that some two months before the evidence was given to which the defendant objected, evidence was given in the suit to the same effect without any exception being taken to it on behalf of the defendant. Now the actual form of the second issue as it now stands is:

"Whether the arrangement set up in paragraph 3 of the plaint is true, and whether such an arrangement in the absence of the factum of marriage, will give the 1st defendant, the status of a wife."

It is common ground that the expression 'factum of marriage' means ceremonies—marriage ceremonies in connection with the alleged marriage. As I observed, I have no doubt as a matter of scientific pleading, this issue and the allegation in the plaint on which the issue is based ought to have contained particulars of the custom upon which the plaintiff sought to rely at the trial. There can, I think, be no question that the words in themselves are wide enough to render evidence of the alleged custom admissible. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar, who contended that we ought not to interfere with the order made by the Subordinate Judge, referred us to a recent appeal to the Privy Council from Burma, Ma Wan Di v. Ma Kin (1), and he called our attention to an observation made by their Lordships on page 242 with reference to a similar question. The observations are in these terms:

"Whether the third issue in the suit was, in its terms, susceptible of the wider construction thus suggested for it or not, the parties, by their conduct of the case, have construed it in the narrower sense of assuming the existence of a marriage."

As Mr. Rangachariar pointed out, this case cannot be regarded as on all fours with the case before us, because in the Burma case, it was at the latest stage of the proceedings that the question came before the Privy Council—the question as to whether the parties could treat an issue as having a certain meaning and whether it was capable of that meaning in view of the fact that the issue had been construed in another and narrow sense at the earlier stage of the proceedings. But here the question has arisen at an earlier stage, namely, on appeal before us from the decision of the Subordinate Judge declining to admit certain evidence.

On the whole, we have come to the conclusion that it is desirable that the plaintiff should have an opportunity of adducing the evidence which the learned Subordinate Judge thought he ought to exclude. The case will, therefore, go back to the Subordinate Judge for a finding on the following issue:

"Is there a custom among the Kambala caste which would create the relationship of husband and wife without any marriage ceremony by the mere fact of a Kambala taking a virgin of another sect into his family as his wife and treating her as his wife, and which would give their offspring the same rights as those of the offspring of a couple who have gone through a marriage ceremony."

The plaintiff will be at liberty to adduce additional evidence and the defendants will also be at liberty to adduce evidence with regard to this issue.

Our order is, of course, without prejudice to the question as to the validity of the custom, if proved. The findings should be returned in six weeks and seven days will be allowed for objections.

AYLING, J.—I agree.

[In compliance with the above order the Subordinate Judge of Madura returned a finding that the custom set up, namely, of a Kambala bringing a virgin of another caste and living with her as wife and treating her as his wife, was neither a definite nor an ancient one, was not proved to be regarded as a proper one by the community, and was not plural or uniform and that he was unable to accept the nine instances referred to before him as sufficient to prove a custom, as instances of such unions having been challenged and recognized were almost wanting.]

[The appeal was then heard by Miller and Abdur Rahim, JJ.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, J.—The appellant is the son of the late zemindar of Bodinayakanur who died on the 15th of December 1883. The principal question which we have to decide is whether his mother Karuppayee, the 4th defendant in the suit, was married to the zemindar or not. The Subordinate Judge has found that she was not married, and I concur in that conclusion. It is conceded that there were no marriage ceremonies performed; it is conceded that there are ceremonies ordinarily in use in the Kumbala caste to which the zemindar belonged. The lady was a lady of a different caste—of the Marava caste—the daughter—so far as we know—of an agriculturist who lived in the town of Bodinayakanur. It is conceded that there is a secondary form of marriage which in Ramasami Kamaya Naik v. Sundaralingasami Kamaya Naik (2), was found to be a legal marriage in this caste in the Saptur zemindari; and it is conceded that that form of marriage was not made use of on the occasion of the union of the zemindar and the 4th defendant. What is alleged is that there was a marriage by mutual consent of both parties. The lady said that she would not go and live with the zemindar, if he did not make her his wife, and the zemindar agreed to take her as a wife. Now it was suggested—and a finding was called for on the point—that by the custom of the caste to which the zemindar belonged, such an agreement amounts to a lawful marriage. The Subordinate Judge has found against the existence of the custom, and we are not asked to reverse that finding. So we have it that there is no custom of the caste by which marriage by mutual consent is marriage; and we are driven to look in the law laid down in Shastras for some form of marriage by mutual consent which might be applied to this case. But it is necessary first to find that the agreement alleged by the lady is proved, and I am unable to differ from the Subordinate Judge's finding that that agreement is not proved. Immediately after the zemindar's death, steps were taken by the Collector of the District, as is usually the case on such occasions, to ascertain facts in relation to succession and so forth, of the zemindari. On that occasion, as Exhibit I shows, this lady, the 4th defendant, made no claim of any sort to be the wife of the zemindar. The Tahsildar in the Deputy Collector's presence took a statement from her, in which she did not say she was the zemindar's wife, and before the Collector, she made no claim of any sort to succession on behalf of her son. Now it seems to me that that could hardly have been her attitude at that time, if, as a matter of fact, some years before she had insisted on being made a wife before she would consent to enter the palace at all. Consequently, it seems to me that Exhibit I and also Exhibit II, in which she did not hesitate to describe herself not as a wife, but as bhogastri, are strongly against the alleged agreement. No doubt, it is suggested that the term "bhogastri" found in Exhibit II may be used to denote a married woman or wife and that was so in the Saptur Zemindari case: Ramasami Kamaya Naik v. Sundaralingasami Kamaya Naik (2). But here it seems to me that the lady's own evidence shows that she did not regard this word bhogastri as meaning a wife. She would resent being called bhogastri. It is pretty clear that at the time of the zemindar's death, she made no claim of any sort to be his wife.

Now as to the evidence in support of the agreement, the agreement is supported by evidence which I cannot regard as of any very great value. The plaintiff's 1st witness who was employed in the zemindari; the plaintiff's 2nd witness who is the 4th defendant herself; the plaintiff's 4th witness who is the 4th defendant's cousin; the plaintiff's 5th witness who was a servant of the zemindar; the plaintiff's 6th witness who was also a servant of the zemindar—those are the persons who allege this agreement between the zemindar and the 4th defendant, and none of them, it seems to me, is a person who can be trusted in this matter. The plaintiff's 1st witness might have known the circumstance when he was a store-keeper under the zemindar, but he is not a person entitled to special credit, and there is no doubt that there are ways of obtaining evidence, in suit of this kind as in others, which have to be taken into consideration in judging the credibility of witnesses. The 2nd witness is the 4th defendant herself, and I am afraid that her statement on the subject cannot be relied on, having regard to Exhibit I and seeing how deeply interested she is in the result. The 4th witness is her cousin and the 5th witness is a petty servant of the zemindar whose evidence cannot be said to be of very great value. The 6th witness is a servant of the zemindar of, perhaps, some higher status; but he is also a defaulting tenant of the 1st defendant: and that might have induced him to give evidence for the plaintiff. So that there is no direct evidence of any very great value on this point—none, certainly, sufficient to counteract that afforded by the strong fact that the lady never alleged a marriage at the time at which she might have been expected to do so, when upon it depended the right of her son to succeed as the son of the zemindar immediately after his death. So that, I have no hesitation in finding that that agreement is not proved by this evidence. That being so, it is unnecessary to say whether I should have to hold that the gandharva marriage by mutual consent, would be a legal marriage between the zemindar and the 4th defendant. There was no such marriage. The lady was taken into the palace under circumstances which have not been proved by any direct evidence, unless I accept the defence evidence that she was abducted without the knowledge of her family, but it is unnecessary for me to say anything about that.

The lady not being married, the case of her son, the plaintiff, must be treated upon the footing that he was the illegitimate son of a continuous concubine of the zemindar.

Then we come to another question of fact which is to be decided, and that is whether the family of the zemindar was divided or not. It is perhaps really not necessary to decide it; because if the family were divided, then it seems to me, on the decision in Parvathi v. Thirumalai (3), the plaintiff would be excluded by the widow; if the family were not divided, then it seems to me our decision must be that the plaintiff would be excluded by the 5th defendant. However, the Subordinate Judge has gone into the question, and it may be desirable to decide it on the evidence. I am of opinion, that it has been rightly decided by the Subordinate Judge that division is not made out. But before I go on to say anything about this evidence, I ought to refer to some evidence on the question of marriage which I forgot to deal with just now: some circumstantial evidence relied upon by the plaintiff. Once we find that the terms of an agreement are not proved by the direct evidence, and that there is no custom in the caste of marriage by mere consent, then circumstantial evidence cannot go far to prove such a marriage in this case. The evidence is evidence of treatment of the 4th defendant and her son, mostly during the life of the zemindar, and might no doubt, standing alone, be used as an indication of a legally valid marriage in due form. But we know that there was no marriage in due form, that is, in any of the customary forms in the caste, and the evidence of treatment could only go to show that the zemindar and his people believed that his union with the 4th defendant was a valid marriage. Considered in that light, the evidence of treatment is really of no great value in this case. But I may say generally that I agree in the finding of the Subordinate Judge that it does not show what it is intended to show. The plaintiff could show no more than that he was treated with affection and his mother was treated with affection and consideration by the zemindar during his life-time, and there is nothing incompatible in this evidence with the position of the lady as a favoured concubine and the mother of the zemindar's only son. Two circumstances to which the Subordinate Judge refers—circumstances which occurred after the death of the zemindar, the alleged putting of new clothes upon the 4th defendant immediately after the zemindar's death and the throwing of earth upon the grave by the plaintiff—might point to the recognition of the 4th defendant by the family as the widow of the zemindar, but upon these points, there is a conflict of evidence, and it is not satisfactorily proved that either of those things was done, and even the circumstantial evidence is not all in the plaintiff's favour. We find that in the zemindari accounts, the lady is referred to simply by her name 'Karuppayee' and not with any of the courtesy titles which, the Subordinate Judge points out, are usually accorded in the zemindari documents to the wives of the zemindars. So all the circumstances are not in her favour; and on the whole, as I have said, I can attach little value to this evidence as evidence of the agreement which forms the only marriage alleged.

Now to return to the question of division, it is not alleged that any partition of the property was made at any particular time. All that was alleged are certain circumstances such as separate residence and separate holding of property by different branches of the family. The branches lived in different houses but in the same compound. That, I think, is not evidence of division. Then it is said that they owned separate properties of the zemindar; but all that that means, so far as I understand the evidence, is that some members of the family held, under the Court of Wards or under the zemindar, portions of the pannai lands, not as having been divided into shares as their own property, but as lessees. That could hardly prove division. There are two judgments in suits to which the 1st defendant was a party and in which she alleged division, and the Judge then held that the zemindar was divided from his uncles. It was to the interest of the 1st defendant to allege it then, and I do not think those judgments are of any very great value in this case. On the other hand, there is Exhibit 42 which shows that there was no division at its date, viz., the 1st November 1862. One member of the family, Vadamalai Muthu Naiker, was living separately, and the others were all living together as one family. That was in 1862, and there is no evidence of any partition thereafter. Surely, if there had been a partition among the various branches of the Bodinayakanur Zemin family after 1862, there must have been some record of it. Then it is said that allowances which had been given by the zemindar to members of the family, were withheld by him in some cases. There is evidence suggesting that the zemindar was displeased with his relations, and he might have withheld the allowances on that account, and the fact that they did not go into Court and sue for them, seems hardly to justify the conclusion that there must have been a division long before, though it may be some evidence in favour of it, is not enough to turn the scale in the plaintiff's favour. And, further, supposing that the evidence of separate holding of lands were taken in favour of the plaintiff as showing division of those lands (though I think that is not so here), even then that would not be enough to show that as regards the zemindari itself, there was a division. There is certainly no evidence in this case that there was any division of the zemindari—that the zemindari was made to form a share of the family property before that time and was allotted to any one branch of the family—or that in any way, there was a separation in regard to the enjoyment of the zemindari among the co-parceners. The Subordinate Judge has examined the documentary evidence and he has come to the conclusion that there was no division. His judgment is full on the subject and it is not necessary that I should discuss those documents in detail. Once it is shown—and I think it is shown by Exhibit 42—that there was no division in 1862, it seems to me that much stronger evidence than we have in this case, is wanted to show that a division was made between the co-parceners after that time.

Holding, then, with the Subordinate Judge, that there was no division, it remains to be seen what is the position of the plaintiff as the illegitimate son of the zemindar in an undivided family. Now there is a decision in Parvathi v. Thirumalai (3), which is directly in point. There it was held that in the case of impartible property, the widow excludes the illegitimate son, and where the property is separate property, both the widow and the illegitimate son would be entitled to have a share in such property. Now the contention on behalf of the appellant was that that decision was shaken by the decision of the Privy Council in Jogenra Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Singh (4).

In a later case in this Court, no doubt it was said that that decision was somewhat shaken, inasmuch as it expressed some doubt as to the correctness of the decision in Jogendro Bhuputi v. Nittetunul Mun Singh (5), which was upheld by the Privy Council. That it has ever actually been overruled, is certainly not the case, and in this Court in Karuppa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (6), it was pointed out that the Privy Council case might properly be confined to its own facts, the case of the succession of an illegitimate son to the share of his legitimate half brother. There was a legitimate son and an illegitimate son of the same father and the Privy Council held that they were co-parceners. But in Karuppa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (6), it was pointed out that the decision stopped there and need not be extended so as to involve a co-parcenary in the other collateral relations. Now Karuppa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (6) is a case which is binding on us, and, if I may say so, it seems to me, that it is a proper interpretation of the Privy Council's decision, and that their Lordships did not intend to decide anything that was unnecessary for the purpose of deciding the question before them. Then we have some decisions of this Court as regards collaterals, that the illegitimate son is not entitled to succession in competition with them. There is the case to which I have referred and Gopalasami Chetti v. Arunachellam Chetti (7), which, no doubt, is a case of partible property. But I shall show at once that that can make no difference.

So far as joint family property goes in this Presidency, the decision in the Privy Council case does not prevent us from following the decisions of this Court that an illegitimate son is excluded by his father's co-parceners. Now Mr. Rangachariar contends that we ought not to treat the property as joint property, but that since the decision in Sartaj Kuari v. De raj Kuari (8), an impartible zamin has come to be held to be the separate property of the zamin, and we must so treat it; the zamin in this case descends by lineal primogeniture, and the plaintiff, though illegitimate, is a son; and it is only in the absence of sons that we need look for any other heir; on these grounds, we ought to decide that the son is entitled to succeed to his father in preference to the widow or co-parceners. But the rule, as I understand it, when we have to look for the heir to an impartible zamin, is to see what the law of succession would be if the property were partible, with reference to the nature of the property, as ancestral or separate, and choose the successor accordingly, and if the successors would be the whole joint family, select one of the members by applying the rule of primogeniture, or whatever it be, applicable to the particular case. Now if that is so,—no decision has been cited to us which shows that it is not,—if we are to have regard to the nature of the property and see what would happen in the case of partible property, then there can be no doubt, according to the decisions of this Court, that the plaintiff is excluded by his father's co-parceners. All the cases which have been cited to us by Mr. Rangachariar as showing that there is no co-parcenary, properly speaking, in a case where the property is impartible as indicating that we ought to treat this as the separate property of the zamin, do not, in any way, deal with or depart from the rule which is to be adopted in looking for a successor to the zamin. There is, it may be, no real, at any rate, no effective co-parcenary in the case of an impartible estate, no effective interest in any collateral member of the family during the life-time of the zamin. That may be the effect of the cases, but they do not, in any way, interfere with the rule that when you have to look for a successor, you should find a person to succeed who would be one of the co-parceners if the property were partible. Now if this property were partible and the family joint, the 5th defendant would succeed. If it were separate property, the 1st defendant would succeed [Parrathi v. Thirumalai (3)]. Consequently without going into all the cases which were cited, there is really no doubt that the plaintiff must, as the illegitimate son of the emindar, be excluded from succession by the 5th defendant. The suit must fail so far as that goes.

There is another question. There was a question raised, whether the plaintiff is bound by a release executed by his mother (Exhibit II). That is a question raised on behalf of the respondent in bar of the plaintiff's claim. On the finding that his claim to the zemindari fails, it is only necessary to discuss the question of release in view of another question, whether he may be entitled to share in certain property which is alleged not to form part of the impartible zemindari. The release was made by the plaintiff's mother, the 4th defendant, on his behalf during his minority, and by it, she gave up all claims to anything in the zemindari and all the properties forming part thereof. She gave it up on his behalf in consideration of the allotment to him of certain land, a small amount of property compared with the zemindari. It is not shown that the lady had any independent advice in the matter. It was suggested that there was one person, the defence witness No. 20, who was her adviser; but he does not say so, and there is no suggestion that she had any other. On the other hand, we have it, the persons who drew up the document, are persons employed by the 1st defendant. So that it seems to me that it is very difficult to agree with the Subordinate Judge that this was a bona fide settlement by the family of family disputes or matters about which there were likely to be disputes. I think it will have to be held that the act of the 4th defendant was not binding upon her son and that the release is not a bar to the claim made by him to the zemindari.

The remaining question is whether there is any property left by the zemindar which is not part of the zemindari. If so, it seems to me on the decision of this Court that the plaintiff, the illegitimate son of the zemindar, is entitled to share it with the 1st defendant. We should have to find that it is separate property of the zemindar and not property of the joint family, and that it was not incorporated in the zemindari at the time of the zemindar's death. Now in the plaint in the suit, the plaintiff did not claim a share; he claimed the whole and did not add an alternative prayer that, if he is not found entitled to succeed to the zemindari, he might be given a decree for a share in the property which does not form part of the impartible zemindari; and on this ground the Subordinate Judge has held that he cannot be allowed a share by the decision in this suit. I think that that is not right. There is really no reason why the plaintiff should not be given his share if he is found entitled to it. A more difficult question, to my mind, is, whether he has any title. That was not made an issue until after the close of the evidence and during the argument. But the question was raised before that—at any rate, the question was raised whether there was any property which does not form part of the impartible zemindari. On this point, the parties put in statements, but no issue was framed at that time. It is not easy to say definitely that evidence was not let in on this question, or that any evidence which could have been let in, was excluded. But at the same time, inasmuch as there was no issue—before the evidence was closed—I think it difficult—it is unsatisfactory to make an attempt—to decide a question so large as this, upon evidence which it is not clear was all the evidence which would have been led to the issue. Consequently, I think that it will be necessary to admit further evidence upon this question.

A further question arises, whether, if the plaintiff can be given a share, he is not bound to bring in all the property which has been allotted for him under the release, and of which he is in possession. That question depends somewhat upon evidence as to whether that property was allotted to him by the release or had been given to his mother for him by the zemindar, and if the latter, on the circumstances under which it was given. In considering the issues which I propose to send down, the Subordinate Judge can deal with this matter.

Having given the matter the best consideration I can, I think that it is desirable to have the assistance of the Subordinate Judge upon it and he will be requested to record findings upon two issues, namely, (1) whether any of the property in suit, and if so, what property, is the separate property of the zemindar and not part of the impartible zemindari and if so, (2) to what share (if any) is the plaintiff entitled in it or any part of it.

I think that fresh evidence may be called as to the questions of fact which arise on those two issues. Two months' time will have to be allowed for findings and seven days for objections.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I have arrived at the same conclusion. This suit was instituted by the plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura West to recover the zemindari of Bodinayakanur. His claim is that he is the son of the late zemindar who died in 1888, and as such entitled to the property.

One of the principal questions that are raised by the appeal, is whether the plaintiff is the son of the zemindar as claimed by him. It is alleged that his mother, the 4th defendant in the suit, was married to the late zemindar in the gandharva form of marriage and it is urged that this form of marriage is valid, according to Hindu Law, in the Kambala caste to which the zemindar belonged. The Subordinate Judge, in a very full and exhaustive judgment, has found that the plaintiff is, in fact, the son of the late zemindar, but he says that he is his illegitimate son as there was no marriage between the 4th defendant and the zemindar. There can be no doubt on the facts that the plaintiff's mother was introduced into the palace of the zemindar while she was very young and that she lived with him till he died and the plaintiff was born to her. The form of marriage which is alleged to have been gone through according to the plaintiff, was this, both the parties, that is, the zemindar and the 4th defendant, who is of the Maravar caste and of humble extraction, agreed that they would live as husband and wife, that the latter should be regarded as the legal wife of the zemindar, and that she accordingly lived with the zemindar in the capacity of a wife. As regards the arrangement under which the 4th defendant came to live with the zemindar, I think the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is right, that, in fact, there was no agreement on the part of the zemindar to accept the 4th defendant as his wife and that she lived with him merely as a concubine. The learned Vakil for the appellant has challenged this conclusion mainly upon certain circumstances which, he says, furnish strong evidence that the 4th defendant must have been living in the palace as a wife and not as the zemindar's concubine. All those circumstances are carefully considered by the learned Subordinate Judge and I think that neither any one of them in particular, nor all of them taken together, are such as can be said to be less consistent with the plaintiff's mother consenting to live with the zemindar as his concubine rather than as his wife. No doubt, the late zemindar treated the 4th defendant, so far as it appears from the evidence, with affection. He apparently took her about to temples and wherever he went on journeys. He gave her accommodation in a part of the palace where his own mother used to live and some other female relations of his, had their quarters. The plaintiff's mother was also allowed a separate cooking establishment and at the plaintiff's birth, certain ceremonies were performed. It also appears that in a certain photograph which was taken of some members of the zemindar's family the plaintiff, who at the time was quite a child, was included in the group. On the other hand, there is a very significant circumstance which goes against the case of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's mother is described in the accounts of the zemindari merely as "Karuppayee", that is, by her bare name without any such title as is customarily given to ladies of the zemindar's family. The plaintiff himself is described merely as "Thambi". The Subordinate Judge, in my opinion, rightly relies on this fact as showing that, although the plaintiff's mother enjoyed the protection and affection of the zemindar, she was not regarded by him or by his officials as his legitimate wife. Also as regards the oral evidence which is adduced in support of the arrangement put forward by the plaintiff, I think the Subordinate Judge has taken the right view. This evidence consists of the testimony of a number of persons who cannot be said to be disinterested and certainly are not people who can be implicitly relied upon to speak the truth. The Subordinate Judge rightly remarks that the fact that the 4th defendant's mother and other female relations of hers did not accompany her to the palace at the time she was first taken there, must be taken as considerably discounting the evidence of the witnesses who were cited to prove the alleged arrangement. On the other hand, there is evidence of certain witnesses for the defendant, including her Pleader, that at or about the time, the 4th defendant was taken to the palace, there was a criminal complaint lodged by certain relations of hers charging the zemindar with abduction. The case apparently came to nothing, as the enquiry showed that the 4th defendant went to the palace willingly and there was no abduction. But what is absolutely conclusive against the case of the plaintiff is the conduct of the 4th defendant herself after the zemindar's death. There was an inquiry held by the Collector as to who were the heirs of the zemindar, and the 4th defendant did not, at the time, put forward any claim on behalf of herself as his married wife, or on behalf of her son as the heir of the zemindar. It is inconceivable that if she was conscious that she occupied the status of a legal wife, she would not have asserted that position at once. On the other hand, in the statements that were taken at the time, the 4th defendant is described as "Bhogastri". Admittedly, this description is not ordinarily applied to the wives of zemindars. No doubt, Mr. Rangachariar contends that "Bhogastri" may simply mean an inferior sort of wife, but the evidence of the 4th defendant herself on the point rather tends to support the case of the defence that "Bhogastri" means only a concubine and not a wife. It was really not until the institution of this suit, which, it may be mentioned, is financed by a number of strangers, that a claim was put forward by the 4th defendant that she was married to the late zemindar and the plaintiff was his legitimate son. I, therefore, agree with the Subordinate Judge that the arrangement alleged by the plaintiff under which his mother lived in the palace has not been proved.

This is sufficient to conclude the case of the plaintiff so far as the question of legitimacy is concerned. But there is a further question which has been discussed by the Subordinate Judge and which has also been argued before us, namely, that even if the alleged arrangement were proved, it would not, in law, amount to a valid marriage. It is not necessary to discuss this question at any length, but having heard the matter fully discussed at the Bar, I wish to express my clear opinion that the agreement set up by the plaintiff, even if proved, would not amount to a valid marriage in Hindu Law. I do not desire to consider the question whether the gandharva form of marriage requires any right or ceremony or not. My opinion is that if this amounts to gandharva form of marriage, it has not been shown that such marriages are valid in the caste to which the late zemindar belonged. It may be that the ancient Hindu Law texts allowed much greater latitude to Sudras in the matter of marriage than to the higher castes or rather to the Brahmins, and that perhaps among the Kshatriyas, the gandharva form of marriage has, even within recent times, been recognized as prevalent in some parts of India. But if this form of marriage were valid among the Sudras or rather in the caste to which the late zemindar belonged, I should have expected some evidence to be forthcoming as to its being in vogue among them. Mr. Rangachariar did not refer to any such evidence, and, as a matter of fact, the evidence, so far as it goes, shows that the gandharva form of marriage has long ceased to be practised, if it ever prevailed, in the Kambala caste. He admitted that there was a regular form of marriage, or rather two forms of marriage, one of a superior and the other of an inferior character, prevalent in the Kambala caste. Supposing, therefore, for argument's sake, that the gandharva form of marriage would, according to the ancient texts, be permissible among the Sudras, I am of opinion that, so far as this caste is concerned, it must, upon the evidence in the case, be held to be obsolete and no longer recognized as valid. Mr. Rangachariar has strongly contended that if ancient Hindu Law texts sanction this form of marriage, we must hold that it is valid. But I am not inclined to accept that position. If I find that a certain caste among the Hindus has long given up this form of marriage, and this is shown by their consistently adopting other more regular forms, I do not think that we are still obliged to recognize its validity in that caste.

The position, therefore, is this. The plaintiff is the illegitimate son of the last zemindar, and the question remains, whether, as such, he is not entitled to succeed to the zemindar in preference to the 1st defendant, the widow of the zemindar, or the 5th defendant, his cousin. With reference to this matter, we have to ascertain whether the family of the late zemindar was divided or not. Upon this point, the Subordinate Judge has discussed the evidence at great length, and I have no hesitation in saying that his conclusion that the family remained joint, must be adopted. Mr. Rangachariar does not allege that there was any formal division at any particular time, but he only points out certain circumstances from which he asks us to conclude that there must have been a division of the family. The circumstances he relies on, are, mainly, that since about 1884, some members of the zemindar's family, the uncles and cousins of the zemindar, held separate properties and had separate dealings in respect of those properties and with the exception of one uncle, the others have not been receiving any allowance or maintenance. He also relies upon certain observations in the judgment in a suit between one Kulasekara, an uncle of the zemindar, and the present 1st defendant to the effect that the plaintiff therein was divided from the zemindar. But none of those circumstances, to my mind, really compel us to come to the conclusion that the family was divided. It is perfectly clear from the documents exhibited in the case that up to at least 1862, all the members of the family lived together, though not in the same building, in the same compound. They received allowances and were treated in every other respect as members of the co-parcenary. Even the Court of Wards, when it had the management of this estate, treated the family as joint, and if there had been a separation after 1884 or 1862, surely there would have been evidence forthcoming as to that. In the absence of that evidence, from the mere fact that some of the members of the family had separate property or cultivated some family lands, it does not follow that there was any alteration in the joint status of the family so far as the zemindari is concerned. The discontinuance of allowances to some of the co-parceners since 1884 was apparently due to the fact that they had quarrelled with the zemindar. As regards the observation in the judgment to which I have referred, not much importance can be attached to it as the question of division or non-division was not in issue in that suit. If, therefore, the zemindar and his uncles and cousins were members of one joint Hindu family, then, I think, it must be held that the plaintiff has no title to the zemindari as against 5th defendant. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that, according to established law, the holder of an impartible zemindari has absolute power of disposition over it and, therefore, we must treat the question of succession on the basis of the zemindari being the separate property of the zemindar. I do not think that that conclusion at all follows. All the decided cases lay down that, for the purpose of finding out the heir to an impartible zemindari where the zemindar was a member of an undivided family, we have to look to the co-parcenary. That is to say, we have to see who would be entitled to the property if it were the case of an ordinary partible joint family property. It may be that for purposes of enjoyment and disposition by the zemindar for the time being, the zemindari stands, to a great extent, on the same footing as the private property of the zemindar; but with that we have nothing to do. We have before us only the question of succession, and for that purpose we must treat the zemindari as ordinary joint family property if the zemindar remained undivided from his co-parceners. Then the question arises, can the plaintiff be said to be a co-parcener just as a legitimate son would be and as such entitled to succeed to the zemindari which is descendible by the rule of primogeniture? Upon that point, the weight of authority is against the plaintiff, at any rate so far as this Presidency is concerned. The illegitimate son of a Sudra is, no doubt, not one of the twelve kinds of sons mentioned in the Mitakshara, Chapter I, section II. He is not a sapinda of his natural father and cannot demand a share in the family property during his father's life-time. In the Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 12, his case is treated as a special case, and all that that section lays down is briefly this. The father may, if he chooses, give a share to his illegitimate son; on his death the illegitimate son is entitled to half the share of the legitimate son, he is also entitled to a share along with the daughter's son; and it has been ruled that upon a proper interpretation of the text, the illegitimate son does not exclude the widow or the daughter. I think the text clearly indicates that the illegitimate son is not a member of the co-parcenary to which his putative father belonged. Much reliance is, however, placed upon the ruling of the Privy Council in Jogendra Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapa'ra v. Nityanand Mar Singh (4), but all that this decision lays down is that, where a man has left a legitimate son and an illegitimate son, on the death of the legitimate son, the illegitimate son succeeds him by survivorship, because, as I understand the decision, the text of the Mitakshara already alluded to gives him a share along with the legitimate son of his natural father and thus a co-parcenary is thereby created between these two. It has also been decided that if the legitimate son dies leaving a son of his own, that son will take his father's share. But I find no warrant for extending the scope of the Privy Council ruling so as to hold that an illegitimate son is a co-parcener along with his father's uncles and cousins. On the other hand, in a series of cases in this Court it has been held that the text of the Mitakshara relating to the illegitimate sons of Sudras only applies to separate property and not to property belonging to a co-parcenary. [See Krishnayyena v. Muttusami (9), Ranoji v. Kandoji (10), Parvathi v. Thirumalai (3), Kuruppa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (6) and Gopalasami Chetti v. Arunachellam Chetti (7). Of these cases Parvathi v. Thirumalai (3), which relates to an impartible estate, is directly in point.]

I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed to the zemindari as against the 5th defendant. Nor, in my opinion, can he oust the widow if the zemindari were, in fact, the separate property of the zemindar. He clearly occupies an inferior status, not only in comparison with the legitimate son, but also the widow, the daughter and the daughter's son, even if it can be said that he is entitled to an equal share with these persons.

On all these points, therefore, the plaintiff's case fails.

I may mention that the Subordinate Judge has also found that the plaintiff is debarred from claiming the zemindari by reason of a release executed by his mother, the 4th defendant, by which she relinquished, on behalf of her son and herself, all rights in the zemindari in consideration of having received certain properties from the first defendant. But I am unable to agree with the learned Judge on this point. When the 4th defendant purported, on behalf of her minor son, to relinquish his claim to the zemindari, which is of considerable value, on receipt of comparatively insignificant properties, it does not appear that she had obtained any legal advice as to the right of the plaintiff to the zemindari. There was no active dispute or question raised as to the plaintiff's title to the zemindari and, in my opinion, it would be going too far to say that the arrangement can be upheld as a proper family arrangement. I think, a release of this nature is beyond the power of a guardian and cannot be upheld, unless it is proved that it was executed after careful consideration of the minor's claims.

The only other point which we are asked to decide in the appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled in this suit to obtain his share in the separate properties of the zemindar, supposing he left any. The suit as instituted was one for recovery of the zemindari and other properties forming part of the zemindari and no partition was asked for in the plaint of any properties which might be found to be the private property of the zemindar. It, however, appears that, during the progress of the suit, an issue was raised as to what were the private properties of the zemindar, though even then the question was not distinctly raised as to the right of the plaintiff to a share in those properties. But, apparently, the question was argued and the Subordinate Judge refused to go into the matter only because this was a suit in ejectment, and he was of opinion that the plaintiff could not get any relief in respect of the private property of the zemindar in this suit. I do not appreciate the difficulty in giving relief to the plaintiff with respect to the separate property of the zemindar. It is not shown that all the parties who would be interested in the decision of such a question, are not before the Court. The state of the record, as it stands at present, is not, however, very satisfactory and I agree with my learned brother that we could not arrive at a satisfactory conclusion without having a proper finding of the Subordinate Judge on the point.

For these reasons, I agree in the order proposed.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, J.—We have decided that the plaintiff is excluded from the zemindari as the illegitimate son of the zemindar, and we have intimated our intention to send down to the lower Court questions for finding whether there is any part of the property left by the late zemindar in which the plaintiff is entitled to share. Before asking the Subordinate Judge to find upon these questions, it has become necessary for us to consider certain objections taken on behalf of the 1st defendant, the result of which, if accepted in their entirety, would be to exclude the plaintiff even from the separate property.

The objections are two. The first defendant relied upon a Will, which she alleges, was executed by her late husband the evening before his death, by which she took a life-estate in the whole of the zemindari and the separate properties: and there was also alleged during the course of the suit a custom by which in the caste to which the late zemindar belonged, illegitimate sons are refused a right to succeed to their father's property. The Subordinate Judge has found both points against the first defendant and the objections relate to them. His decree dismissing the suit, is now sought to be supported on the ground that both those points also ought to have been found against the plaintiff.

I am doubtful whether on a true construction of the Will (Exhibit VI) which is propounded, it could be said that it deals with separate property of the zemindar at all. If it does not, of course it is unnecessary for us to consider whether it is genuine or not; but we have heard arguments fully upon the evidence and it may be desirable that we should pronounce our opinion upon the fact.

First then, the first defendant alleges that Exhibit VI is the last Will of her husband. The plaintiff alleges that Exhibit VI is a forgery. The Subordinate Judge has found that Exhibit VI is not proved to be the Will of the late zemindar, and he has given in his judgment very full reasons for his finding. He has considered the evidence very minutely and at considerable length; he has dealt with a number of circumstances which have led him to the conclusion that the Will should not be accepted, and I have come to the conclusion that his decision on the point is one with which I ought not to differ. I admit I have come to this conclusion with some hesitation because I have found great difficulty in deciding whether the evidence is sufficient or not to prove the Will; but on the whole, I am satisfied that I ought not to differ from the Subordinate Judge's finding, and I shall shortly state the principal reasons why I have come to that conclusion.

I agree with the Subordinate Judge that on the evidence, the state of the health of the zemindar was on the 14th December such that it is difficult to accept the signature in Exhibit VI as the signature which a man in his condition was likely to make, that the zemindar was able so late as 5 or 6 in the evening on the 14th December, to make a signature so steady and so strong as that in Exhibit VI—that is a point which we have to bear in mind. Seeing then that the appearance of the Will itself suggests suspicion, we have to look to the circumstances before and after the zemindar's death, to see whether it is more likely that he signed it or that he did not. The Subordinate Judge is of opinion that there is clear proof on the evidence that the zemindar was contemplating making a Will. I am not quite sure that is so. The letter which he received from his legal adviser in Madura, the late Mr. Pole, dated the 9th December, suggests to my mind that until then, at any rate, it was not the intention of the zemindar to make a Will. From the letter, I gather that he sent agents to Madura to see Mr. Pole and consult him whether an adoption could be made. He had been ill for some time, he had been in September to Madura for treatment, he returned in November to Bodinayakanur. Then early in December, he appears to have sent agents to Madura to see Mr. Pole, and Mr. Pole in reply to their representation gives his opinion as to adoption and as to the provision to be made for the illegitimate son, the plaintiff, in the event of adoption being made, but he says nothing about the Will. Exhibit XXVIII to my mind clearly shows that he had not considered that question. There is no doubt Exhibit XXIX, a letter written by Mr. Pole's clerk to the manager of the zemindari in which he makes some reference to the Will and to himself as executor, was written about the same time. But it may be that the manager consulted the clerk as to the desirability of the form in which the zemindar should make a Will in the event of his making one - it may possibly be, the manager recognised that the illness of the zemindar was assuming a serious aspect. However that may be, I do not think that Exhibits XXVIII and XXIX suggest that a week before death, the zemindar himself had any idea of making a Will. Then there is Exhibit XXXI, letter of the 13th December, which he is said to have sent to the Sub-Registrar of Periyakulam to bring him to Bodinayakanur in order "to register a bond and a Will which I intend doing." We have not the original of Exhibit XXXI. We have only what purports to be an office copy of it written by the zemindar's clerk, defence 36th witness, which is suspicious to this extent that it is the last entry in the book that was kept at the time and might have been inserted at any time. The Sub-Registrar's attendance was not procured, the original of the letter which is put in, was not produced and his clerk, the defence 37th witness, says that the original of the letter brought by the zemindar's servant on the 14th December never came into his office records at all. So apart from the evidence of the defence 36th witness, we really do not know what was actually sent to the Sub-Registrar, or whether whatever was sent was sent by the authority of the zemindar or merely of the first defendant or the manager. Secondly, it is difficult to say that this evidence proves, even if we take it that a letter was sent and contained, as Exhibits XXXIV, XXXV and XXXVI would seem to indicate, some reference to the registration of a Will, it is difficult to say that it is proved that the making of the Will was in contemplation of the zemindar himself.

That being the state of things as to the zemindar's intention to make a Will, it seems to me, there are circumstances which make it improbable that any Will was made. As to what happened on the 14th, we find the accounts (Exhibits WWW) show certain payments to various persons of sums of money on that day and these persons are no doubt the attestors of the Will. I only allude to this because the Subordinate Judge relied on it, but those payments might have been explained if these witnesses had been asked to explain them, but they have not been so asked, and I, therefore, take it that the accounts ought not to be used as evidence against the Will. But there is no doubt that the conduct of the first defendant on the 15th December, immediately after the zemindar's death, does give rise to some suspicion. Before her husband's dead body was removed from the house, she made considerable gifts of land—100 gulies each, worth about Rs. 200 a guli—to a representative of each branch of her husband's family. That suggests undoubtedly that at that time she had some necessity, some need, of securing that they should not attack whatever she might do, and we find, when the Deputy Collector a few days later suggests to them and asks them questions as to the Will, all of them say they do not know whether there is a Will or not. That again suggests that in spite of the gifts to them, they were not prepared to give up entirely any claim there might arise in their favour by denouncing the genuineness of this Will and - I do not say it is strong evidence, but it does suggest that the facts surrounding the production of this Will, were not altogether satisfactory to the relations of the zemindar.

VISWANATHASWAMI NAIKER V. KAMULU AMMAL.

There are only one or two other matters with which I shall have to deal. In Mr. Pole's letter, there is a suggestion for a provision for the plaintiff, the illegitimate son. The Will as propounded makes no provision for him. I think it is unlikely that unless the zemindar's agents had put the matter to Mr. Pole, he would have said anything about any provision for the plaintiff in the letter. So that suggests that the zemindar was intending a provision for the plaintiff on the 9th December. The fact that the Will contains no such provision, is commented upon by the Subordinate Judge, and in these circumstances, I think rightly, as pointing against the probability that it was a Will made by the zemindar himself. A stronger point perhaps is the fact that of all the nine attestors to the Will, there is not one of whom it can be said, he is a person in a position of such independence that it could be said of him that it is highly improbable he would have been a party to a forgery of the Will. On the 14th December—during part of the day at any rate—there were present two zemindars at Bodinayakanur, the zemindars of Peraiyur and Gantamannaickanur, and it seems to me extremely difficult to believe that at any time during the day when they had been there, one or the other was not asked to attest it. The Peraiyur zemindar was a friend of the late zemindar, and yet the evidence on behalf of the first defendant is that while he and Gantamannaickanur zemindar were away in the afternoon, the Will was made. If the zemindar was so strong as the first defendant would have us believe, there is no reason why he could not have waited till their return; if on the 13th, he contemplated the making of the Will, it is likely that he would ask at least one of these two gentlemen to be an attestor. It is suggested that the zemindars would not like to attest for fear of having to come to Court to support the Will; and it is suggested that the zemindar would like to keep the contents secret from them. But why he should have done so, it is not at all clear to me, and the fear of having to have to support the Will in a Court, does not seem to be a sufficient reason to deter his friends from attesting his Will.

Then there is another thing against the Will, that is, the form of it. If it was the

Will the zemindar had contemplated making, if it was, as the first defendant would wish us to believe, copied from the draft of a Pledar of Madura, it is not in a form that one would expect it to be. The Subordinate Judge points out and places a perfectly legitimate reliance on the fact that this Will does not appear to be a copy of a draft which would have been made by a gentleman of what I may call literary competence in the Tamil language. It is not likely to be the work of Mr. Seshier; it is more likely to have been drawn up by some of the servants in the palace; and an extraordinary thing about it is that while Seshier was a Pledar on behalf of the first defendant during the trial, and he was actually summoned to appear as witness, yet he was not put into the box to support the case that he drafted the Will. That is a fact which is very much against the case that he drafted the Will, and, therefore, against the case made by the defendant that the zemindar had sent agents to Madura to get a draft of a Will. The Subordinate Judge also points out that there were other persons, the Hospital Assistant who attended on the zemindar, one of his relations Choekalinga Asari, persons who might have attested the Will but whose attestation does not appear. Those, I think, are the strongest grounds (there are others relied on by the Subordinate Judge) in the case which make it improbable that the zemindar did execute the Will. As to the oral evidence, it is mainly the evidence of the attestors and, as I have said, the attestors are not persons on whose word any great reliance can be placed. The oral evidence on both sides is, it seems to me, unworthy of any great credence—on the one hand, there are the attestors and on the other hand, there are witnesses who say that the zemindar was in a state of collapse before the afternoon of the 14th, and that does not seem to be true; but the circumstances to which I have alluded and on which the Subordinate Judge relies are sufficient to throw so much doubt on the Will as to justify me in accepting the Subordinate Judge's conclusion that it is not the Will of the zemindar.

The other point raises the question of custom—the question whether by the custom of the Kambala caste an illegitimate son takes nothing of his father's estate or of the family property. The issue (21st issue) was framed at a late stage of the case after the defence evidence had been recorded: for our purpose, the evidence must be strong enough to show that the plaintiff is excluded by custom, not from the zemindari only but also from the partible property which belonged to the zemindar. The Subordinate Judge has dealt seriatim with all the instances on which reliance was placed to make out this custom. In most of them, he has disbelieved the evidence; he has disbelieved the evidence of some persons on the ground that they came to Court without summons, of others, that they are relations of the first defendant or persons favoured by the first defendant, of others, that they are men of straw. It has not been suggested to us that his appreciation of the evidence is not justified; thus a very large number of the instances to which he refers in paragraph 90 of his judgment, are instances which—though he does not clearly say so in paragraph 91—he holds are not proved, and I think we must agree with him. Then he points out that most of these cases are cases in which the illegitimate sons were provided during the life-time of their father with allotments for themselves: assuming these cases to be true, although it might be that this allotment might not in law prevent them from coming down upon their father's estate for a share after his death, still those are not cases in which the custom is distinctly proved. Because, it may be that the sons were satisfied with what was given them: that does not prove the custom set up. That leaves only a few cases which, as I have said, are for the most part discredited on the ground that the witnesses could not be believed. There is one instance the Subordinate Judge does not seem to disbelieve, that spoken to by the defence 8th witness—he speaks of an illegitimate son not getting any property, but that would be only one instance and would hardly be sufficient to prove a custom. There is another, the 46th witness, an illegitimate son: he says that his father's widow made provision for his maintenance only—but this I find is one of the cases the Subordinate Judge has disbelieved on the ground that the witness attended the Court without summons. There are not, I think, any other cases of which it can be said that they are clearly cases in which illegitimate sons, by reason of a custom, have been excluded from inheritance of property which must have devolved on them under the ordinary law.

This as to the oral evidence. Then there are two judgments against the custom—judgments in which the custom was alleged but held to be not proved; and there is Exhibit XXIV of 1849 in which a zemindar alleged that by the custom of his caste illegitimate sons were not entitled to succeed to a zemindari. That is a document which might be valuable, if necessary, to exclude the plaintiff from the zemindari, but it is not of any value as we are dealing with the custom in reference to partible property. Considering the Subordinate Judge has disbelieved most of the evidence, he is right in holding that the evidence is not distinct, clear, and sufficient to make out the custom. And as a matter of fact, the custom set up in the written statement was not so general a custom as it was necessary to prove to enable the defendant to exclude the plaintiff from succeeding to the separate property. It is only a custom having reference to the zemindari—that was the custom which was set up in the written statement of the 1st defendant: but even that custom was not at first made the subject of a distinct issue. It may be that the 17th issue was intended to include it, as the evidence, the Subordinate Judge has considered was let in by the 1st defendant before the 21st issue was framed, but it is not quite clear to me that the question was properly raised in the suit. Assuming it was, I am prepared to hold that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding the custom was not made out. The effect then of my findings on these two questions raised by the 1st defendant, is that the finding which we agree to call for, will have to be furnished by the Subordinate Judge.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I entirely agree that the memorandum of objections fails on the two points raised by it and I have nothing to add to the judgment which has been delivered.

VISWANATHASWAMI NAIKER v. KAMULU AMMAL.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar, C. S. Govindaraja Mudaliar, C. S. Venkatachariar and N. R. K. Talachariar, for the Appellant.—The learned Subordinate Judge erred in holding that plaintiff was only entitled to a third share in the properties. He ought to have held that he was entitled to share equally with the widow and entitled to half a share. Vide Ranoji v. Kandoji (10), Parvathi v. Thirumalai (3), Chinnammal v. Varadarajulu (11), Meenakshi Anni v. Appakutti (12), Rahi v. Govinda (13), where the authorities are elaborately considered, and Shesgiri v. Gireva (14).

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Iyengar, K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer, P. Tirumalachariar and R. Padmanabha Chariar, for the Respondent.—The learned Subordinate Judge is right in holding that plaintiff is only entitled to a third share. The original text of Mitakshara is clearly in favour of that view. See Yajnavalkya, Chapter II, section 8, verses 133, 134. See also the commentaries of Vijnaneswara, Apararka and Medhathithi. All these lay down that the illegitimate son is only entitled to a third share. All the Sanskrit-knowing text-book writers on Hindu Law have also construed the text in the same way.

JUDGMENT.—The first question to be decided is whether the plaintiff, as the illegitimate son of his deceased father, is entitled to share equally with his widow, the 1st defendant, or whether he is only entitled to half of her share, i.e., to $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the properties. In a series of cases in Madras beginning with Ranoji v. Kandoji (10), it has been held that an illegitimate son succeeding to his deceased father along with a widow, daughter or daughter's son is entitled to half of the properties and not merely to one-third [Parvathi v. Thirumalai (3), Chinnammal v. Varadarajulu (11), Meenakshi Anni v. Appakutti (12)]. In Rahi v. Govinda (13), Chief Justice Westropp elaborately reviewed all the texts of Hindu Law dealing with the rights of an illegitimate son and came to the conclusion (as we understand the judgment) that the illegitimate son was entitled to a half share of the properties; and in Shesgiri v. Gireva (14), Sargent, C. J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, took the same view and understood the decision in Rahi v. Govinda (13) as laying down the same rule. The learned Vakil for the respondent invited us to construe for ourselves the original text of the Mitakshara, which he says is clearly in his favour. He also cited the commentary of Apararka on the text of Yajnavalkya and the commentary of Medhathithi, the well-known commentator of Manu, on the same text. He further contended that all the text-book writers on Hindu Law who knew Sanskrit have construed the passage of the Mitakshara in the way he construes it. Much may no doubt be said in favour of this construction. But the decisions of this Court are not based merely on the interpretation of the text of the Mitakshara. In Ranoji v. Kandoji (10), in which the position of an illegitimate son was fully considered, reliance was placed on a passage from the Dattaka Chandrika which states in clear terms that the illegitimate son shares equally with the widow, daughter and daughter's son. It was this very passage of the Dattaka Chandrika which was relied on as authority for not excluding the widow from the succession when there is an illegitimate son, whereas the Mitakshara omits the widow from the category of persons who are not excluded by the illegitimate son. The Dayabhaga, which gives the illegitimate son an equal share with the daughter and daughter's son, was also referred to. In this state of things, we are not prepared to depart from the course of decisions in this Court which hold that the plaintiff is entitled to share equally with the widow.

The next question is whether the last zemindar's step-brother, Vadamalai, was disqualified by reason of insanity from sharing with his brother their father's separate property. Vadamalai, it should be mentioned, who was older than the zemindar but was the son of a junior wife, did not press his claim to succeed to the zemindari in preference to his brother, nor did he, after the brother's death, claim the zemindari against the widow. As regards the first point the respondents explain that according to the custom of Kambala zemindars the son by the senior wife succeeds to the zemindari. As regards the separate property left by their father it is urged that there was no need for a partition as Vadamalai lived with his brother, the late zemindar, in the palace, and after his death, went on living with his widow, the 1st defendant, whose sister's daughter he had married. These facts, it is suggested, explain his conduct in not having put forward a claim to the zemindari after his brother's death, and at the time of the compromise between the widow and the more distant co-parceners. The mere fact that Vadamalai did not press his claim to the zemindari is not, in our opinion, sufficient proof of insanity. On the other hand, we have the fact that he gave evidence in Court in Original Suit No. 15 of 1891 and though subjected to a lengthy examination gave rational answers, and that he married and had issue. On the whole we think the evidence does not establish that Vadamalai was disqualified from inheriting. It follows, therefore, that the late zemindar's share in his father's separate properties on his death passed by survivorship to Vadamalai and that the plaintiff has no claim to them. On this ground his claim to the properties mentioned in Exhibit ZZZZZ also fails.

Item 55 of Schedule A, the next item claimed by the plaintiff, is a bungalow in Madura built by the Court of Wards during the minority of the late zemindar at a cost of Rs. 60,000 on a site inherited by the zemindar and his brother from their father. The 1st respondent contends that either the bungalow became the joint property of the two brothers as the site was joint property, or that it was built as a town residence for the zemindar and was intended to pass with the zemindari, and that in either view the plaintiff's claim must fail. We agree with this contention.

The 1st respondent objects to items 61, 65 to 69, 73 to 76, 79 to 113, 116 to 118, 120 to 127, 129 to 138, 149, 151 to 177, 185, 221, 248, 249, 254, 285, 308 to 318, 322, 324, 330 to 345, 348, 350, 352, 354 to 357, 359 to 366, 375 to 379, 63, 64, 371 to 374, 380 to 410, 62, 70 to 72, 77, 78, 139, 140, 146, 323, 326, 328, 358, 367, 217, 218, 228 to 231, 247, 252, 259 to 264, in this Schedule A, which have been allowed to the plaintiff. They are lands within the ambit of the zemindari and the zemindar was entitled to the melcaram therein. He purchased the kudivaram right in items 61 to 410 and succeeded to the kudivaram right in the remaining items on the death of his mother. All these lands were cultivated as pannai along with the other pannai lands of the estate. They are clearly properties intended to be held with the zemindari; in fact they are accretions to the zemindar's interest in the zemindari. Following the decisions of this Court in Lakshminipathi v. Kandasami (15), Ramasami Kamaya Naik v. Sundaralingasami Kamaya Naik (2), The Ramnad case (16) we disallow the plaintiff's claim to these items.

The plaintiff also claims items 57, 69, 135 and 136 of Schedule C. Item 57 is a jewel usually worn by women. The 1st defendant swears that the jewel was purchased for her. Considering that at that time the 1st defendant was the only lady in the zemindar's family who could have worn such a jewel we are inclined to believe her evidence and disallow the plaintiff's claim to this item. The respondent admits that the plaintiff is entitled to item 69. Items 135 and 136 are loose pearls and rubies and the 1st defendant claims them as her stridhanam. She did not set up this claim in Exhibit K and there is only her evidence in support of her claim. We are not prepared to act on it. We, therefore, allow the plaintiff's claim to these two items.

The 1st respondent claims the cattle used for cultivating the pannai lands, i. e., items 173 to 203 of Schedule C. The appellant admits that if the pannai lands are held to be part of the zemindari he would not be entitled to a share in them. As we hold that the pannai lands are appurtenant to the zemindari we disallow the plaintiff's claim to these items. The plaintiff admits that the 1st defendant is solely entitled to item 231 of this Schedule. The plaintiff accepts the valuation given by the 1st respondent for item 229, viz., Rs. 1,300, and will be entitled to his share of this sum and not to Rs. 2,607 as claimed by him. The 1st defendant argues that she ought not to have been made accountable for certain jewels said to have been given by her to her daughter and claims contribution from the partible properties for the expenses connected with her daughter's marriage. This claim was not made in the lower Court and we, therefore, disallow it.

The 1st defendant also contends that the lower Court was wrong in making her liable for items 9, 11, 15 and 17 of Schedule D. Plaintiff's witness No. 48, who was the 1st defendant's manager for a considerable time, says that these items were collected by the 1st defendant. She denies this, but does not produce the bonds which should be in her possession. In these circumstances we agree with the lower Court that she is liable to the plaintiff for his share of these items.

The finding of the lower Court will be modified accordingly.

As the release Exhibit II has been set aside, the plaintiff must deliver to the 1st defendant items Nos. 1 to 3 in Schedule I to that deed as they are pannai lands and are, therefore, impartible. In the fourth item and the moveables in the same Schedule he is entitled to a half share and he must account to the 1st defendant for the other half.

The plaintiff and the 1st defendant will pay and receive proportionate costs in the appeal.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs; and the Pleader's fee payable will be on Rs. 1,588-15-0 plus Rs. 541-1-0.

*U.P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 4 (12)—Sale of proprietary rights including sir by Hindu widow—Expropriatory rights not allowed—Sale declared null and void on suit by reversioners, effect of, on sir land.*

A Hindu widow alienated the property of her husband including sir. Three years after the sale she claimed expropriatory rights but her claim was disallowed. On the death of the widow, the reversioners got the sale cancelled:

Held, that the effect of the cancellation of sale was that sir rights revived in favour of the reversioners. [p. 852, col. 2.]

Third appeal from the order of the Commissioner of Allahabad Division dated the 16th January 1915, reversing the order of the Collector, Cawnpore District, in a case of correction of papers, under section 39 of Act III of 1901.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMES, S. M.—(August 11th, 1915.)—As it is admitted that the possession of the land was not transferred by the mortgage by Musammatt Rajrani in 1892 this mortgage does not affect the question. In 1899 she sold her proprietary rights to one Narpatt Singh and died in 1906. In 1910 Sheo Nath and other reversioners brought a suit to re-gain possession of the land and redeemed the mortgage. It was decided by the order of the High Court, dated 9th January 1912, that the sale was not binding on the reversioners. Musammatt Rajrani, it is admitted, never took up her expropriatory rights. It is clear then that the second proviso to section 4 (12) of the Land Revenue Act, definition of sir, does not apply as Sheo Nath or Musammatt Rajrani was never an expropriatory tenant. The only question is whether the land which was sir at the time of the sale ceased to be sir as becoming the subject of an expropriatory tenancy, under the first proviso to that sub-section.

The High Court decided there was no justification for the sale and that it cannot be held to be binding on the reversioners, RAMACHANDRA MARDARAJA DEO V. DUKEO PODHANO.

The effect of this seems to be that the sale was practically declared null and void from the beginning and that the land in question remained as sir.

The only other question to be settled is in how much of the sir the respondent should be recorded. The appellants refused to agree to any compromise by which the respondent should be recorded as sir-holder in specific plots amounting to one-eighth of the sir. The other reversioners it is clear are no longer sir-holders and I think the Commissioner has come to a right conclusion that the present respondent must be entered as sir-holder in the entire sir. The appellants, of course, can sue them for profits.

Appeal dismissed with costs and Rs. 10 Pleader's fees.

(Later.)

The respondent says there is another reversioner who has not parted with his proprietary rights, Sukhbasi by name. The appellants admit this. Sukhbasi's name should be entered as joint sir-holder with Sheo Nath. To this extent the order of the Commissioner must be modified.

Madrass Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 3—"Rent," meaning of—Suit to recover rent for land let for building houses—Jurisdiction—"Jerayati" land, meaning of.

Money due for occupation of land let for the purpose of building houses is not "rent" within the meaning of section 3 of the Madras Estates Land Act, and a suit to recover it is cognizable by the Civil and not by the Revenue Court.

The term "jerayati" is applied indiscriminately both to "cultivable land" and "inam land," and does not necessarily mean land let for agricultural purposes.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Aska, in Small Cause Suit No. 1114 of 1912.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. Narasimha Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think that this is a suit which ought to be tried by a Civil Court and not by the Revenue Court. The suit is to recover a certain sum of money from the defendants who were in occupation of land belonging to the plaintiff, which was let to them for the purpose of building houses. That is the exact language which occurs in the muchilika and in the plaint. It is true that in both these documents the land is described as "jerayati" land, and it is upon the use of that word that the learned Pleader for the respondents has based his arguments and asked us to say that the defendants are ryots and that the land is their occupancy holding and so on. These inferences do not, it seems to us, necessarily arise from the use of the word "jerayati". "Jerayati" may mean cultivable land but it is also used in this Presidency as opposed to inam land.

Section 3 of the Estates Land Act defines rent as meaning "whatever is lawfully payable in money or in kind or in both to a landholder for the use or occupation of land in his estate for the purpose of agriculture." Here the land was not used or let for the purpose of agriculture. It does not appear that it was ever used for purposes of agriculture. But whatever that may be, it was certainly let for the purpose of building houses, not for agricultural purposes. That being so, the money payable on account of it is not rent within the meaning of section 3 of the Estates Land Act, and the suit is, therefore, cognizable by the Civil Court and not by the Revenue Court. We allow this revision petition and direct the Deputy Collector to forward the plaint to the District Munsif, who will receive it on his file and dispose of the case according to law. The costs will abide the result.

In ejectment suits a question of proprietary title arises not only in cases in which the defendant pleads proprietorship in himself, but also in cases in which he alleges that a third person, and not the plaintiff, is the proprietor of the land in dispute and, therefore, an appeal from a decision of a Collector in such a case lies to the District Judge.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 9th February 1915, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Fatehpur District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

Holms, S. M.—(August 17th, 1915.)—The appeal from the Assistant Collector's order was lodged before the District Judge. He held that section 177 (c) of the Tenancy Act only applied to suits in which there was a question of proprietary title as between the plaintiff and the defendant, who is alleged to be a tenant, and treated the present suit as turning on section 198 only. In the present suit the tenant did not exactly plead the benefit of section 198, but definitely pleaded that the plaintiff was not the proprietor of the land in suit but that a third person was, and in the tenant's grounds of appeal to the Commissioner he definitely re-stated his position. In this view then the appeal fell under section 177 (c) and should have been to the District Judge. I must hold, therefore, that the Additional Commissioner had no jurisdiction to hear this appeal.

I would, therefore, set aside the order of the Additional Commissioner and direct that the Commissioner return the memorandum of appeal with directions that it should be filed before the District Judge who may be inclined to review his order. Parties to bear their own costs in this and the Commissioner's Court.

An application for execution of a decree by some of the legal representatives of a decree-holder is covered by Explanation I of Article 182 of the Limitation Act and saves limitation in favour of all the legal representatives even though it does not purport to be on behalf of all.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1857, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Berhampore, in Execution Petition No. 296 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.—The only point for determination is whether, an application by some of the decree-holder's legal representatives not purporting to be on behalf of the other legal representatives also is sufficient to save limitation.

No authority has been cited to show that such an application is not covered by the Explanation I of Article 182 of the Limitation Act. The mere fact that the Court would have required the persons applying to give security for the shares of the other legal representatives, will not make an application one not falling under clauses 5 and 6. So far as defendants are concerned Ramanuj Sewak Singh v. Hingu Lal (1) decides that an application for execution against one of several legal representatives saves limitation and there is no reason why the same rule should not apply when one of the plaintiff's representatives applies for execution. *Ponnampilath Parapravan Kuthath Haji v. Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 515 of 1912, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Karkal, in Original Suit No. 317 of 1911.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the daughters of one Kochu. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 are 1st defendant's children, 5th plaintiff and 3rd defendant are the children of the 2nd defendant. In March 1876, Kochu's husband gave a permanent lease of the properties in dispute to his wife. Kochu, in her turn, executed a deed of gift in respect of the major portion of these properties in favour of her two daughters, the 1st and 2nd defendants. In 1910, the 2nd defendant sold some of the properties which fell to her share to the 4th defendant. The present suit is for a declaration that the alienation is not binding on the plaintiffs.

We think the Subordinate Judge is right, but not for the reasons given by him. The argument of the learned Vakil for the appellants is that the gift to Kochu by her husband is as puthrabakasam property and that the 2nd defendant has no right to alienate it. Reliance was placed on Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (1) and on the recent Full Bench decision in Machikandi Parkum Maramittath Tharuvil Mootha Chettiam Veetil Chakkara Kannan v. Varayalankandi Kunhi Pokker (2). It is conceded that when Exhibit I was executed, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were in existence, yet the gift is not made by the father to his wife and children although the words used are makkalapaanpya. There are no words conveying the estate to the children. In Exhibit II, Kochu deals with the properties as her self-acquisition. It is clear to our mind that the donor, under these circumstances, intended to give an absolute estate to his wife. In Narasamma Hegadthi v. Billa Kesu Pujari (3), a similar gift was construed as conferring an absolute right on the donee. The words (santhanaparampariah) in the document in that case were appropriate, as the donee was a male, and his heirs, in the absence of a testamentary disposition, would not be his children. In the present case, the donee being a female, makkalin is the proper word to denote the course of devolution. We see no reason to extend the principle of the Full Bench decision to this case.

A mere record of certain plots as sir in partition is not sufficient to bring them under the category of clause (b) of section 4 (11), which requires the establishment of village custom.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of Allahabad Division, dated the 24th September 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Allahabad District, in a case of ejectment under section 58 of Act III of 1901.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(August 5th, 1915.)—The Pleader for the appellant was unable to show any evidence to support his contention of fact and in fact was inclined to agree that it was wrong. I find, however, that the patwari in the connected case, Musammât Keshia v. Wazir, stated that plots Nos. 1896 and 2117 were recorded in the patti of Ram Sewak as khud-kasht of two years in 1282 Fasli. The Commissioner, however, noted that no terms of years were given. The appellant says that this appeal does not turn on this point at all so it is unnecessary to clear up the discrepancy. Respondent bases her claim merely on clause (c) of the definition of sir and supports the Commissioner's finding for this reason. We have got then that Ram Sewak cultivated this land khudkasht in 1282 Fasli for two years and there is no evidence that he cultivated for longer. Plot No. 1896 was cultivated by shikmis in 1286 and 1287, and plot No. 217 by shikmis in 1285, 1286, 1292 and 1293, the year of partition. At partition these two plots were recorded as sir, although they certainly did not fall under the definition of sir in clauses (a) and (b) of section 4 (11) of the Land Revenue Act. I am unable to accept the view that the mere record as sir in partition is sufficient to bring land under the category of clause (b), which requires the establishment of village custom.

I would, therefore, set aside the order of the Commissioner and restore that of the Assistant Collector, respondent bearing costs throughout.

Hindu Law—Adoption by Sudras in Dattaka form—Physical delivery and acceptance of child, necessity of.

Among Sudras the corporeal delivery and acceptance of the child is the essential part of adoption in the dattaka form. An actual adoption solely in pursuance of a previously manifested intention or a previous promise made, is not enough. (p. 856, col. 2.)

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Cheungleput, in Original Suit No. 56 of 1912.

FACTS.—In one suit the plaintiff claimed as legatee under a Will executed by one Sami Reddi and in the other suit he claimed as the reversioner of Sami Reddi on the ground that the adoption of the 2nd defendant, the son of Ramakrishnan an orphan, was invalid in law. The District Judge upheld the Will and decreed the first suit, but he dismissed the second suit on the ground that the adoption was valid. The present appeal is against the decree.

Mr. R. Shadagopachariar (with him Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar), for the Appellant.—In this case it is clear that the adoption was in pursuance of a previous promise made to the adopted boy's father. In Venkata v. Subhadra (1) and Subbarayar v. Subbammal (2) an adoption in pursuance of a previous promise was held to be valid. When once the view that an inchoate adoption can be perfected years after by the performance of the religious ceremony is held to be valid, there cannot be any decree of incompleteness. In this case, the promise had been made to the father, and the datta homam was only performed subsequently.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.—The decisions in Shoshinath Ghose v. Krishnasunderi Dasi (3) and Bireswar Mukerji v. Ardha Chander Roy (4) clearly show that there must be an actual giving and taking of the boy to be adopted. It is not enough that there should be a manifestation of a mere intention or promise. If this view were upheld, it would lead to dangerous consequences. There must be an actual giving and taking.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—In the connected Appeal No. 111 of 1914 we came to the conclusion that the Wills set up by the plaintiff and the defendants were not proved. The further question arises for decision in this appeal whether the adoption of the 2nd defendant is valid and whether the gift evidenced by Exhibit VI in his favour is binding on the reversioners beyond the life-time.

The parties are Sudras and the adopted boy was an orphan at the time of the adoption. There is no dispute as to the factum of the adoption. The District Judge was of opinion that the father of the adopted boy, Ramakrishna Reddi, himself gave the boy to the deceased Sami Reddi during his life-time and that the actual adoption made by the widow of Sami Reddi 10 years later was valid. He relied on Venkata v. Subhadra (1) and Subbarayar v. Subbammal (2). In the first place, the evidence regarding the physical handing over by Ramakrishna Reddi and the acceptance by Sami Reddi is not satisfactory. Mr. Srirangachariar gives no independent evidence, but speaks to what he heard Sami Reddi say as to what Ramakrishna Reddi told him. This proves very little. Moreover, Exhibit I makes it clear beyond all doubt that no giving took place when Sami Reddi was alive. Even accepting all that has been deposed to, and regarding Exhibit XI (a) as expressing a preference by the deceased in favour of the adoption of one of the sons of Ramakrishna Reddi, the actual adoption solely in pursuance of a manifested intention will not be valid. The Judicial Committee held in Soshinath Ghose v. Krishnasunderi Dasi (3) that among Sudras "the corporeal delivery and acceptance of the child.....is the essential part of adoption in the dattaka form". In the case before the Privy Council, the correspondence that passed between the parties showed that one party offered and the other party accepted the boy. There was no physical delivery or acceptance. Their Lordships held that this proper contract was of no avail. This view has been affirmed in Bireswar Mukerji v. Ardha Chander Roy (4). In the present case, Sami Reddi at least made a promise by word of mouth that he would adopt one of the sons of his dying brother. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar wants us to extend the analogy of Venkata v. Subhadra (1) to this case. His argument is that there cannot be different degrees of incompleteness and if one form of inchoate adoption can be perfected years after by the performance of the religious ceremonies, the manifestation of an intention to adopt a particular boy can be regarded as a step in furtherance of the actual adoption. Venkata v. Subhadra (1) decided that if the giving and taking had taken place, the datta homam can be performed subsequently. This view may lead to complications. It is not clear whether during this period of suspense, the boy is to be regarded as belonging to the natural or adoptive family. Estates might fall in. Is he to have a share in either, in both or none of the estates belonging to the two parties? If the physical act of delivery is part of the same transaction of the datta homam, although some little time may intervene between the two ceremonies, the one act can be regarded as supplementing the other. Assuming, however, Venkata v. Subhadra (1) to be correctly decided, as to which it is not necessary to express a definite opinion now, we are not prepared to extend it to the case of Sudra adoptions. The adoption must be declared invalid. From what has been stated in the connected appeal, it follows that the gift deed (Exhibit VI) is not binding on the plaintiff beyond the life-time of the 1st defendant. The appeal must be allowed and the suit decreed with costs throughout.

WALLIS, C. J.—I quite agree and will only add that I attach very little importance indeed to the oral evidence as to a conversation which took place some seventeen or eighteen years before between Sami Reddi and his brother Ramakrishna. Sami Reddi at that time was married, but his marriage had not been consummated and though his horoscope may have possibly stated that he was not going to have children, I do not think that his faith in horoscopes would have been such as to induce him to make a definite promise to take one of these boys in adoption. I think that at most what passed amounted to no more than this, that he promised that if he had occasion to make an adoption, he would give preference to one of the sons of Ramakrishna Reddi. Therefore, for this reason also I think that the appeal must be allowed and the suit decreed with costs throughout.

In a suit for ejectment, the defendant pleaded that he was the proprietor of the fields in dispute or in the alternative that he had at least acquired occupancy rights. The Court of first instance held against the proprietary right but held that the defendant had got occupancy rights. The plaintiff appealed. The defendant raised an objection that no appeal lay to the Commissioner, who held that no question of proprietary title was in issue in appeal as the defendant appeared to have acquiesced in the Assistant Collector's finding, that the proprietary title could not be urged and that the appeal had been filed solely on the point of occupancy tenure.

Held, that as the defendant could not appeal he could not be said to have acquiesced in the finding of the Assistant Collector, and, therefore, a question of proprietary title was in issue and the appeal lay to the District Judge. [p. 858, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 29th June 1914, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Allahabad District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(August 25, 1915.)—Section 177 lays down that "in all suits in which a question of proprietary title has been in issue in the Court of first instance and is a matter in issue in the appeal", the appeal shall lie to the District Judge from the decree. The question for decision is, what interpretation should be placed on the words "and is a matter in issue in the appeal". In this particular case the Assistant Collector found against the defendant's claim to be proprietor of the land in suit for reasons which on the face of them seem to be good ones, but he found that the defendant was an occupancy tenant and dismissed the suit for ejectment. Against this the plaintiff appealed to the Commissioner and the defendant had no opportunity of raising his claim to proprietary title before the Commissioner, for the Commissioner held for reasons which are not very clear, that he could not raise it, not observing apparently that an appeal could only be against a decree and not against a finding on an isolated issue. The appellant's contention is that when the question of proprietary title is a matter which was in issue before the Commissioner when he heard the appeal, section 177 (e) applies, and that immediately the question was raised before the Commissioner he should stop further proceedings and return the appeal to be filed before the District Judge. This is rather a curious contention and would lead to a good many inconvenient results, one of which might be that when the respondent found all the other points in the case had been decided against him he would then raise the question of proprietary title and get the case sent to the District Judge, who would then have to go afresh into all the points which the Commissioner had practically decided. The other side urge that the words mean that the question of proprietary title must be a matter in issue in the grounds of appeal, and bases this interpretation on the argument that obviously the forum should be without doubt before the memorandum of appeal is filed.

The latter interpretation has the undoubted anomaly of allowing the District Judge to decide a considerable number of appeals in which the question of proprietary title is in issue and leaving a considerable number of appeals in which the question is really in issue to be decided by the Commissioner. No decision of the High Court or of the Board can be found on the question for decision before me. Looking at the undoubted intention of the Act that questions of proprietary title should be decided on appeal by the District Judge and not by the Commissioner, I accept the appellant's contention, and would set aside the order of the Commissioner and direct that he return the memorandum of appeal to the appellant before him to be presented to the District Judge. Costs to follow the event.

CAMPBELL, J. M.—I have discussed this case with my colleague and agree with his finding.

But it is said that Prosunno having entered into a compromise it was not open to him to file a cross-appeal. It was not contended apparently before the District Judge that Prosunno was estopped. We do not think that he was estopped from taking the argument which was accepted by the District Judge, namely, that if the sale is set aside at all it must be set aside in its entirety.

Assistant Collector, Allahabad District, in a case of ejectment.FACTS.—The suit was for the ejectment of the appellant. One of her objections was that the plaint was defective as it was not signed by the plaintiff as required by the Code of Civil Procedure. She referred to section 51 of the old Civil Procedure Code, present Order VI, rule 11.
For plaintiff reliance was placed on Order III, rule 1, and clause (c) of section 193 of the Tenancy Act for the proposition that the plaint signed by a recognised agent was valid. The Assistant Collector held that an agent is allowed to sign the plaint only when the plaintiff is unable to do so for sufficient cause, [Mahabir Prasad v. Shah Wahid Alam (1).]The Commissioner held that the Assistant Collector was under no obligation to satisfy himself as to the reason why it was not signed by plaintiff himself; that the fact that it was not so signed predicated the existence of adequate reason viz., absence

JUDGMENT.—I entirely agree with the Commissioner in this case. The provisions of rule 14, Order VI, that a plaint should be signed by the party are subject to the provisions of Order III, rule 1, which allow any act required by law to be done by a party to be done by the authorised agent of that party. There was in my opinion no reason whatsoever why the Court should in this case have required the personal signature of the plaintiff himself. The ruling by Mr. Justice Knox, Mahabir

a case in which the plaintiff himself had no knowledge of the institution of the suit, and does not appear to me to be relevant to the present case in which there is no reason whatsoever to doubt that the suit has been instituted with the approval of the in Miscellaneous Appeal Suit No. 24 of 1914.

FACTS.—The landlords in execution of a rent decree put up to auction-sale, an occupancy holding which was non-transferable, and purchased it themselves for Rs. 38 only. Previous to the sale, the holding was purchased by the mortgagee of the holding in execution of the mortgage-decree. The mortgagee-auction-purchaser applied under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code of 1908, to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud and irregularity and substantial injury. The Munsif held that he had no locus standi to make the application. On appeal the District Judge held that he had a locus standi and on consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that the rent sale was at a grossly inadequate price due to fraud and suppression of sale proclamation by the landlords decree-holders and set aside the sale. He, however, did not come to any finding as to the allegation of the mortgagee-auction purchaser that after his purchase the landlords, by accepting rent and salami from him, recognised him as a tenant and also on the question whether the application under Order XXI, rule 90, was barred by limitation. The landlords moved the High Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and got a Rule. On the Rule coming on for hearing before N. R. Chatterjee and Roe, JJ., their Lordships remanded the case to the District Judge for findings on the question of limitation and the alleged recognition. The District Judge found that limitation was saved by the operation of section 18 of the Limitation Act as the decree-holders by their fraud concealed the sale from the mortgagee and that the mortgagee-auction-purchaser had never been recognised by the landlords. After the return of these findings, the Rule again came on hearing before Mr. Justice Richardson and Mr. Justice Roe.

Babu Romesh Chandra Sen, for the Petitioners.—The mortgagee-auction-purchaser has no locus standi as his purchase is not valid against the landlords. The landlords could eject him at any moment. If this rent sale is set aside, the landlords might bring a suit for ejectment of the mortgagee-auction-purchaser and he will have no answer to the suit. He acquired no interest in the holding as against the landlords and, therefore, he has no locus standi to make an application to set aside the sale. The cases reported as Abdul Rahman Sarkar v. Promode Behary Dutta (1), Deno Nath Dey Sarkar v. Kali Kumar Roy (2) and Prosunno Kumar Midlar v. Bama Churn Mondal (3) support my contention.

[RICHARDSON, J.—The case reported as Abdul Rahman Sarkar v. Promode Behary Dutta (1) is clearly distinguishable—there the question was as to the locus standi of a transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding to make an application under Order XXI, rule 89. The words of rule 90 are very wide. How could it be said that the mortgagee's interests were not affected by the rent sale when he was entitled to the balance of the sale-proceeds after satisfaction of the rent decree?]

Babu Ramesh Chandra Sen.—The word "interests" in rule 90 means interest in the property sold. The mortgagee has no valid interest in the occupancy holding as against the landlord. The word "interests" in rule 90 has been construed by Mr. Justice Mookherjee in Jogendra Nath Chatterjee v. Manmatha Nath Ghose (4) and also in a Madras case, Kathiresan Chettiar v. Ramaswamy Chettiar (5).

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee (with Babu Biraj Mohan Mozumdar), for the Opposite Party, contended that apart from the question of land or jurisdiction, the application of the petitioner ought not to succeed in a case like this. It had been found by the lower Appellate Court that the landlords by means of fraud and suppression of sale proclamation purchased the holding at one-twentieth of its price. In a case like this the decree-holder could not invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The powers of the High Court under that section are to be exercised to prevent injustice and not to perpetuate injustice. Again the District Judge did not fail to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in him, nor did he exercise his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity in holding that the opposite party had a locus standi. At best he committed an error of law. The word "interests" in rule 90 has not the restricted meaning contended for by the other side, as the preceding sentence shows—a "person entitled to share in rateable distribution of assets" may not have any interest in the property sold. Referred to Abdul Rahman Sarkar v. Promode Behary Dutta (1).

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the order of the District Judge of Dacca, dated the 18th May 1914, should not be set aside. The matter arises out of the sale of a holding at the instance of the landlords in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. The holding had previously been sold by a mortgagee of the original tenant in execution of a decree on the mortgage and purchased by the mortgagee for the sum of Rs. 400. At the sale at the landlord's instance, the holding was purchased by the landlords for the sum of Rs. 38 only. The mortgagee then applied under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, to have the sale set aside on the ground of material irregularity and fraud in conducting the sale. The Court of first instance held that the mortgagee had no locus standi to make such an application and, for that and other reasons, dismissed the application. On appeal, the learned District Judge held, on the contrary, that the mortgagee was entitled to make the application and, on the merits, he set aside the sale. We are asked to set aside the order of the District Judge on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make it, the mortgagee not being a person entitled to apply under the rule referred to. It should be mentioned that the sale in both instances was the sale of an entire holding. The question at issue depends on the meaning to be attached to the words "whose interests are affected by the sale" in Order XXI, rule 90. Our attention was invited by the learned Pleader for the petitioners (the landlords) to the ruling of this Court in the case of Abdul Rahman Sarkar v. Promode Behary Dutta (1). In that case, it was held (the case arose in Eastern Bengal) that the purchaser in execution of a mortgage-decree of an entire non-transferable occupancy holding was not competent to apply under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside under that rule a subsequent execution sale held in execution of a rent-decree in which the landlord himself had purchased the property. The language of rule 90 is, however, not the same as the language of rule 90. The words of rule 90 "whose interests are affected by the sale" are very wide and, in our opinion, it is impossible to say that the mortgagee in the present case does not come within the rule. For one thing, he is interested in the sale-proceeds and is clearly entitled to any balance of the sale-proceeds remaining over after the landlord's dues have been satisfied. It seems to us that his interests were clearly affected by the sale which he seeks to have set aside and that the view adopted by the learned District Judge is correct. That being so, the Rule must be discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

An order of ejectment against a pro forma defendant against whom no relief was asked as he was alleged to have no connection with the land in dispute, is not bad when that person's rights have been threshed out and he has been found to be a non-occupancy tenant. [p. 862, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad, dated the 21st May 1913, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Cawnpore District, in a case of ejectment.

NIHAL SINGH v. MAL SINGH.

FACTS.—The entry in the papers of 1319 Fasli in regard to the land in dispute was Ganga Charan, non-occupancy tenant, twelve years, absconded (farar), new, one year, Ram Charan Brhaman. The zaminidar brought a suit against Ram Charan and Chainwa on the ground that they were his tenants-in-chief and that Ganga Charan had no connection with the land. He made Ganga Charan a pro forma defendant but sought no relief against him. Ganga Charan claimed occupancy rights. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that Ram Charan and Chainwa were the sub-tenants of Ganga Charan.

Upon appeal the Commissioner ejected Ganga Charan holding that he had not acquired occupancy rights.

On appeal the Board passed the following

JUDGMENT.—The only objection pressed in this case is of a technical character. It urges that the ejectment of Ganga Charan should not have been decreed in a suit in which the plaintiff denied that he had any connection with the land in question and alleged that Ram Charan and Chainwa, entered as sub-tenants of Ganga Charan, were really the tenants-in-chief. I cannot see that the fact that the plaintiff has been drawn up in this way has in any way injuriously affected Ganga Charan, who has been able to have his claim to occupancy rights considered on the merits. It is clear that he cannot have occupancy rights and that the decree for his ejectment is in accordance with the law.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

Mr. Devi Dyal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for possession of the site in dispute, alleging that he was the owner and had been forcibly dispossessed by defendant about 1½ years prior to suit. Defendant denied and alleged that he and not plaintiff was the owner.

The first Court gave plaintiff a decree for possession, but the learned District Judge on appeal held that the site was shamilat deh, and reduced the decree to one of joint possession along with the defendant.

Before me it has been admitted by Counsel on both sides that the site is shamilat deh, and that the parties are both proprietors.

Plaintiff's Counsel asks for a remand to prove a special custom whereby a proprietor can hold exclusive possession of shamilat land. Plaintiff sued on the allegation of being the sole owner and I do not consider he is entitled to the remand now asked for. Besides, plaintiff is not seeking to hold possession, he is seeking to re-gain possession, and as this is not a suit under the Specific Relief Act, he must show a superior title in order to dispossess the defendant. He has an equal title no doubt and he holds a decree for joint possession. With that he must rest content.

I dismiss the appeal, but I pass no order as to costs of this appeal, as both parties falsely alleged exclusive possession to begin with.

JUDGMENT.

HOLMS, S. M.—(August 3rd, 1915.)—In this case the Additional Commissioner has come to a definite finding that the appellants' predecessor was out of possession for a year, that is to say, for over six months. Apart from this the remarks in Appeal No. 31 of 1914-1915* apply to this case also, but it is necessary to come to a decision on the point of law. On the whole I think the words "subject to the provisions of this Act" in section 168 are against the respondents' contention that the re-gaining of possession mentioned in section 13 (a) must be within six months. I doubt if it was ever intended that the privileges extended under section 13 (a) should be less than those extended under sections 13 (b) and 13 (c), and the reason why no period was laid down in section 13 (a) appears to be that two different classes of cases have been treated therein although it would have been better had they been kept separate. In the case of ejectment under a decree of a Court it is impossible to say how long the appeal will take and, therefore, no limit was laid down. This is probably the reason why no limit was laid down in the case of a

The instance on page XVI of Sir Charles Roe's Customary Law, in which the answer to question 12 to the effect that daughters exclude collaterals among Raus was taken from the Mamdasi Patti and other Raus, supported the contrary view. Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22—Succession—Ex-proprietary rights acquired by two persons in full right—Death of one without heirs—Right of heirs of other to get entire holding—Survivorship.

Where two persons acquire jointly ex-proprietary rights and one of them dies without leaving heirs entitled to inherit under the Tenancy Act, the other gets the entire holding.

Appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 1st October 1914, confirming that of the Settlement Officer, Fatehpur District, in a case of correction of records.

FACTS.—The material facts of the case are that the two sisters Musammât Minti and Musammât Pragiya inherited in proprietary rights from their father and sold the same and became full ex-proprietary tenants. Musammât Pragaiya left a son Sardha Prasad, who in his life-time made a gift of tenancy to his son Mata Prasad whose name was accordingly entered. On the death of Musammât Minti, her husband's name was entered as she left no heirs entitled to inherit. On the death of her husband Kali Charan, his brother Hari Har Prasad claimed to be entered as co-tenant with Mata Prasad. The Court of first instance ordered Mata Prasad's name to be entered in half of the holding as ex-proprietary tenant and in half, the name of Hari Har Prasad as non-occupancy tenant. On appeal the Collector reversed the decision holding that on the death of Musammât Minti, the entire holding reverted to Mata Prasad alone, as there had been no division between the two sisters.

The Commissioner confirmed this order. On 3rd appeal being preferred, the Board passed the following

JUDGMENT.—Appellant relies on a note of a case reported in the Allahabad Law Journal decided by the High Court on February 4th, 1910, in which it was held that when a Hindu died before the passing of the present Tenancy Act and left two daughters, on one daughter dying, the occupancy tenancy devolved on her surviving sister in preference to her sons. Admitting this head-note is accurate, the circumstances of the present case are different, for the zemindari appears to have been sold during the life-time of the two sisters and they became ex-proprietary tenants in full right. Mata Prasad then apparently has a valid claim to be ex-proprietary tenant in this holding. What remains to be determined is, what Kali Charan's rights, if any, are. The Assistant Collector was clearly wrong in holding him to be a non-occupancy tenant in an ex-proprietary holding. He clearly has no claim whatever to be entered as a co-ex-proprietary tenant. He argues that he is not a sub-tenant for there is no contract of tenancy between him and Mata Prasad. It is true that he has paid at times half the rent to the zemindar apparently because the zemindar admitted him at one time without any justification to part of a holding which was not vacant and he is in possession of certain fields. Had I been trying the case originally, I might have considered whether his name should be entered in the column of tenant-in-chief as kabiz in respect of these plots or whether his name should not appear at all. On the whole, on third appeal, I see no sufficient reason to interfere with the order passed and dismiss the appeal with costs and Pleader's fee, Rs. 10.

Mehta Bahadur Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Santanam, and Pandit Balnukand Tirkha, Official Liquidator, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, L. Hakim Rai, has been found by the Additional Judge, Multan, to be a contributory of the Peshawar Bank, Ltd. in respect of 500 shares, and the question for determination in this appeal is whether the order of the lower Court placing him on the list of the contributories is or is not correct.

There is no doubt that the appellant was duly allotted 500 shares in April 1912 and the plea that the contract to take shares was induced by fraud or misrepresentation was overruled by the lower Court and has been expressly abandoned by the learned Pleader for the appellant in this Court. The point for decision is whether the alleged transfer of the shares to one Uttam Singh is a valid transaction which is binding upon the Company and its creditors.

Now it is quite clear that the Company suspended payment on the 22nd September 1913 and though it is alleged that it again did some business for a few days, I do not believe that there was any real resumption of its normal work.

It appears that L. Hakim Rai was a member of a sub-committee of three persons appointed to manage the affairs of the Bank by the so-called Directors of the National Banking and Commercial Corporation, Ltd., which was never registered as a Company under the Indian Companies Act and did not, therefore, come into existence. It is apparent that the above such committee had no legal status and its action cannot be binding upon the Bank.

The circumstances of the case make it abundantly clear that L. Hakim Rai in order to escape his liability on the shares decided to transfer them to Uttam Singh, whom the learned Judge of the lower Court describes as a man of straw. The instrument of transfer was executed on the 3rd of October 1913 and placed on the 9th October 1913 before the above-mentioned sub-committee consisting of Sedhu Ram and Tota Ram besides L. Hakim Rai. It appears that Sedhu Ram refused to sign the proceedings which, inter alia, dealt with the proposed transfer and at the next meeting held on the 20th October he was not present and one Bawa Jaswant Singh was added by Hakim Rai and Tota Ram to co-opt with them, and the deed of transfer was sanctioned by the three persons.

The question of the transfer of shares never came up before a meeting of the Bank or of its Directors. In fact the alleged transfer was not sanctioned by any person or body of persons having authority to act on behalf of the Bank. I have already stated that the sub-committee which dealt with the matter was not a properly constituted body and had absolutely no power to enter into any transaction for the Bank.

The transfer not having been effected with the approval of the Directors cannot be enforced against the Liquidators, who represent the creditors and the contributories and the appellant consequently is still liable on the shares.

In view of the above finding, it is unnecessary to refer to the rulings which have been cited before me. The rule of the law is quite clear that where a Company is insolvent, although no winding-up has commenced the BADRI PRASAD v. RAM CHARAN.

Directors may and ought to refuse registration of any transfer (vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 5, page 189). In this case, the Directors never got an opportunity of expressing their opinion on the proposed transfer. Lala Hakim Rai being himself a Director was bound to observe all requisite formalities, and if he transferred his shares informally, it is his own fault. In fact the non-observance of the requisite formalities by a Director is a very strong piece of evidence tending to show that the transfer was not made bona fide. I, therefore, decline to recognise the transfer and hold that the appellant was properly placed on the list of the contributories and that his name must remain there. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

similar suit had been dismissed in 1910. The judgment in that case was admittedly erroneous, but erroneous or correct, I can find nothing in the law which provides that the dismissal of a suit for enhancement bars the filing of a fresh suit in a subsequent year. Section 41 provides that when an enhancement has taken place, no suit shall lie for a period of 1½ years, but it does not provide that when an enhancement has been refused, no suit should lie for that period. It would be reasonable that it should so provide, but it does not do so and we are not entitled to read such a provision in the law as it now stands. I think that the Commissioner's order must, therefore, be cancelled.

The applicant urges that the rent arrived at by the Court of first instance, but not given effect to, should be decreed. I have examined proceedings in that case. The enhancement is very large and the rates are considerably in excess of the Settlement Officer's rates of 1902. The enquiry was confined to the patwari's selection of one-soil holdings of similar character to each of the fields in question. They are not based on any extended examination of the general incidence of occupancy rates. It appears to me that such an enhancement cannot safely be sustained. I would, therefore, in restoring this case to the file of the Court of first instance, direct that it be disposed of afresh on the merits after an exemplar area has been obtained by the enquiries of the presiding officer himself of extent sufficient to make certain that the rates arrived at are really prevailing rates, and not rates which may accidentally be payable by one or two holdings.

Costs will follow the final issue.

The phrase “person executing the document” and its derivatives as used in sections 32, 34, 35, 58 and 73, Indian Registration Act, refer to the person who actually signs or marks the document in token of execution, whether for himself or on behalf of some other person; and he is the proper defendant in a suit brought to compel registration under section 77, Registration Act. [p. 867, col. 2.]

A Registering Officer has to satisfy himself that the document was executed by the person by whom it purports to have been signed, not constructively but actually. Neither the Registrar nor a Court proceeding under section 77 has any concern with the legal effect of the document, e. g., when the executant is an agent professing to execute for a principal, whether he has authority to execute. [p. 868, col. 1.]

Registration is designed to guard against fraud by obtaining a contemporaneous publication and an unimpeachable record of each document, and for that purpose, the Registering Officer has only to be satisfied that a certain person, not being a minor or lunatic, admits having signed or marked the deed which purports to have been executed by him. [p. 868, col. 1.]

Where a deed is executed by an agent for a principal and the same agent appears and presents the deed or admits execution before the Registering Officer, that is not a case of presentation under section 32 (c) of the Act or appearance and admission by agent under section 34 (1) and 35 (b). It is a presentation, appearance or admission by the actual executant himself. [p. 868, col. 1.]

A person who executes in favour of another any document which is compulsorily registrable, is bound ipso facto to assist in having that document registered, wholly irrespective of its legal effect upon himself or any other person. [p. 868, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—One Ranglal Dhannal was a business agent of Musammal Ganga Bai, the defendant in this suit. On the 8th April 1909 Ranglal, purporting to act on behalf of his principal, executed a document, Exhibit P-1, which is a sale of a 1-anna 4-pies share in a certain Ginning Factory for Rs. 4,000 to the plaintiff. The deed recites that it is executed to carry out a contract for the above sale made by the defendant's husband before he died, and that he had already received the price in full. This deed was not presented for registration till the 21st July 1909, when only 17 days remained of the original period of 4 months allowed for that purpose. The document was presented by the plaintiff, and he foresaw that the attendance of the executant was not likely to be secured before the period expired. He, therefore, applied to the District Registrar, before whom presentation was made, for an extension of time under section 34 of the Indian Registration Act, as applied to Berar, but that application was refused, and, on the 9th August 1909, no executant having appeared in the meantime, the Registrar made an order refusing to register the deed. Thereupon on the 21st August 1909, the present suit was filed under section 77 of the said enactment, to compel registration. As the plaint was originally drawn, the defendants impleaded were Musammal Ganga Bai, the constructive executant, and Ranglal, the actual executant of the deed, but the name of Ranglal was subsequently struck out under circumstances which have not been disclosed. The first Court went into the question of Ranglal's authority to bind the defendant by execution of the deed, and gave the plaintiff a decree against the defendant Ganga Bai to compel registration. On appeal by Ganga Bai the learned District Judge held that in the present suit the plaintiff had no cause of action against Ganga Bai as she had not executed the deed, and reversing the decree of the first Court the Judge dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has, therefore, made this second appeal.

I am of opinion that the appeal must fail. I think that the phrase “person executing the document” and its derivatives as used in sections 32, 34, 35, 58 and 73, Indian Registration Act, refer to the person who actually signs or marks the document in token of execution, whether for himself or on behalf of some other person: and that he is the proper defendant in a suit brought to compel registration under section 77, Registration Act. A Registering Officer has to satisfy himself that the document was executed by the person by whom it purports to have been signed, not constructively but actually. Neither the Registrar, nor a Court proceeding under section 77 aforesaid, has any concern with the legal effect of the document, e. g., when the executant is an agent professing to execute for a principal, whether he has authority to execute. Registration is designed to guard against fraud by obtaining a contemporaneous publication and an unimpeachable record of each document, and for that purpose the Registering Officer has only to be satisfied that a certain person, not being a minor or lunatic, admits having signed or marked the deed which purports to have been executed by him. Section 35 of the above enactment is very clear on that point.

It is hardly necessary to say that, where a deed is executed by an agent for a principal, and the same agent appears and presents the deed or admits execution before the Registering Officer, that is not a case of presentation under section 32 (c) of the Act, or appearance and admission by agent under sections 34 (1) and 35 (b). It is a presentation, appearance or admission by the actual executant himself. In the present case, for the purposes of all procedure under the Registration Act, and, therefore, for the purposes of this suit, Ranglal was the executant of Exhibit P-1. The Registering Officer had to satisfy himself that Ranglal, being sui juris and compos mentis, had executed the deed: and though Ranglal could make such admission personally or by representative, assign, or duly authorized agent, it was his admission alone that could give jurisdiction to the Registering Officer to register the deed: and, therefore, he is the only person against whom a suit would lie under section 77, Registration Act. It would make no difference to his legal power to voluntarily admit execution, or to his legal liability to be compelled to do so by suit, that his execution was unauthorized, or that, before registration, he had ceased to be an agent of the principal on whose behalf he had professed to act in executing the document. A person who executes in favour of another any document which is compulsorily registrable, is bound ipso facto to assist in having that document registered, wholly irrespective of its legal effect upon himself or any other person. For the purposes of this suit, and of the registration which it is brought to compel, Ranglal was, and Ganga Bai was not, the executant of the document.

Therefore, the suit has rightly been dismissed.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—Under the present wording of rule 519 the words "as the Taxing Master shall in his discretion think proper to be settled by Counsel" only refer to special affidavits, and not to pleadings. There can be no doubt there was an intention to follow the English rule, but this intention was frustrated by the word "such" being placed before 'special affidavits' instead of before 'pleadings.' Therefore, the Taxing Master must be asked to review his taxation and allow such fees to Counsel as he thinks proper.

RESPONDENT.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVII, r. 2—Failure of one party to appear at an adjourned hearing—Judicial discretion Dismissal for default.

Order XVII, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, throws upon the Court the responsibility of exercising a judicial discretion before disposing of a case under Order IX, when at an adjourned hearing the parties or any of them fail to appear.

Where, therefore, a plaintiff has closed his case, and there is evidence which if un rebutted would prove his case, it is not a judicial exercise of discretion to dismiss the suit for default, and the Court should record the defence evidence even though the plaintiff is absent and dispose of the case on its merits.

Messrs. T. V. Gopaiswami Mudliar and A. Ganesa Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit has been dismissed under Order IX, rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code, but Order XVII, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, only says that when at an adjourned hearing the parties or any of them fail to appear, the Court "may" dispose of the case under Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code. The word being "may" and not "shall" entails on the Court the exercise of some discretion, and this discretion must be judicial discretion. When a plaintiff has closed his case, and there is evidence which if un rebutted would prove his case, it can hardly be deemed a judicial exercise of discretion to dismiss the suit for default, because the defendant and his witness could not be examined. There was no reason why the defence evidence should not have been recorded in plaintiff's absence, and the case disposed of on its merits—and this is the course that the Subordinate Judge should have followed. The plaintiff's Vakil's conduct in throwing up the case can hardly be justified and

"Thirty years ago I had taken from you Rs. 150 and in lieu thereof executed two bonds mortgaging with possession my agricultural land (jirayat)..... Now I execute a new bond for those rupees and agree that in lieu of those rupees, you may take the produce of the jirayat. . . . After payment to you of the whole amount of this bond, you shall pay Rs. 8 per annum on account of rent of the field in perpetuity from generation to generation."

Held, the document was an usufructuary mortgage-deed and that the stipulation in the deed that after the mortgage-money was paid off, the mortgagee would remain in possession as perpetual lessee on payment of a yearly rent, was a clog on the equity of redemption. [p. 870, col. 2.]

Dr. H. S. Gaur, for the Appellant.

Rai Bahadur V. R. Pandit, for the Respondent.

PAOLAT RAI P. SHEIKH CHAND.

JUDGMENT.—These are both appeals of the plaintiff against the judgments and decrees of the District Judge. Second Appeal No. 660 is the appeal against the decision of the District Judge on the appeal of the defendants against the decree of the Munsif in favour of the plaintiff giving him a decree for redemption. Second Appeal No. 661 is the appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge dismissing the plaintiff's appeal in respect of the price of redemption, which judgment and decree were a necessary consequence of the decision on the defendants' appeal.

The questions for decision are whether the deed, Exhibit P-1, which is described as a patta also amounts to a mortgage, and whether the lease contained in the same document is a clog on the equity of redemption. If both these questions are answered in the affirmative, the plaintiff is entitled to redeem, and the District Judge was wrong in dismissing his suit. The District Judge has correctly set out the terms of the deed. The document is styled a patta, and the following are the relevant portions of its contents:—

"30 years ago I had taken from you Rs. 150 and in lieu thereof executed two bonds mortgaging with possession my agricultural land (jirayat). . . . From that year the jirayat has remained in your possession and was cultivated by you. Now I execute a new bond for those rupees and agree that in lieu of those rupees you may take the produce of the jirayat, three mango trees and two moha trees. When myself or my heirs would pay the rupees you may receive them, but we will not take the jirayat and trees; you may possess and cultivate them for ever The field and trees have been given in your possession from to-day, there will be no interest and I will claim no produce of field or trees. When I or my heirs pay the whole amount mentioned above you may receive it and continue to cultivate the field for ever from this day. . . . After payment to you of the whole amount of this bond, you shall pay Rs. 8 per annum on account of mango produce and rent of the field in perpetuity from generation to generation."

The District Judge, while admitting that the test as to whether a zur-i-peshgi lease is a mere lease or an usufructuary mortgage is whether the transfer was made for the purpose of securing the amount of money advanced, or merely in consideration of lease money received, and while recognising that such leases partake of the nature of usufructuary mortgages when there is a power of redemption reserved, goes on to say:—

"The document in suit is undoubtedly not the mortgage-deed nor a renewal of it and it has been rightly urged that the suit for redemption cannot be based upon it. It is a lease intended to take effect after redemption, and is a document upon which the mortgagee may rely as a defence against the mortgagor's claim for possession, but it cannot form the basis for a suit for redemption. From the recital in it the two mortgages were of 30 years' prior date, and these are the mortgages which the plaintiff must redeem. . . . The document in suit merely contains an admission of the previous mortgages, but it is not a renewal of them or a fresh mortgage, for it was not executed for the purpose of securing the payment of the balance due on the old mortgage. There is in it no obligation to pay the old balance, nor any power of redemption, express or implied."

I can only say that in face of the express terms of the document these remarks are somewhat surprising. The document is clearly an usufructuary mortgage-deed, in renewal of two old usufructuary mortgage-deeds; it secures the debt due on the old deeds. It provides that usufruct be taken in lieu of interest, and that the mortgagee's rights as such shall come to an end on the payment of the principal. It goes on to provide that on the principal being paid, the mortgagee shall remain in possession as perpetual lessee on a rent of rupees 8 a year. A clearer case of an usufructuary mortgage combined with a perpetual lease forming a clog on the equity of redemption it would be difficult to find. The District Judge refers to Mahomed Muse v. Jijibhai Bhagvan (1) and Subrao Mangeshaya v. Manjappa Shetti (2), but distinguishes those cases on the ground that the present deed is not a mortgage-deed at all. The facts here are not to be distinguished from those in Mahomed Muse v. Jijibhai Bhagvan (1), where Sargent, C. J., observed—

(1) 9 B. 524.

(2) 16 B. 705.

CHILUKURI SITARAMAYYA v. VENKATA RANGAYYA APPA RAO.

with the onerous obligation of accepting the mortgagee as a perpetual tenant, and ought not, therefore, in our opinion, to be enforced in a Court of Equity."

The same learned Chief Justice in Subrao Mangeshaya v. Manjapa Shetti (2) remarked:—

"The general rule as to agreements of this nature between mortgagor and mortgagee is stated very broadly by Lord Redesdale in Hickes v. Cooke (3) in the following terms:—'No agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee for a beneficial interest out of the mortgaged premises (such as a lease) where the mortgage continues, ought to stand, if impeached within reasonable time, from the great advantage which the mortgagee has over the other party in such a transaction.'"

And the learned Chief Justice goes on to observe that a mulgeni or permanent lease would certainly have the effect of diminishing the value of equity of redemption. In Pamurlapati Ankiredu v. Samurlapati Subbiah (4) it was held that where a lease and mortgage form one transaction and contemplate the continuance of the lease after the discharge of the mortgage, the transaction is a fetter on the equity of redemption which the Court ought not to enforce.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the learned Munsif was right in holding that the lease formed no obstacle to the plaintiff's suit for redemption, though his ratio decidendi, that the lease was not for consideration, was not correct. I set aside the decrees of the District Judge, and direct that the decree of the Munsif allowing redemption be restored, subject to the plaintiff's appeal as to the price of redemption, which the District Judge must now dispose of on the merits. The respondents-defendants will pay their own and plaintiff's costs in both Appellate Courts, on the defendants' appeal to the District Court and on the plaintiff's consequent appeal to this Court. The costs of the plaintiff's two appeals regarding the price of redemption will be costs in the suit.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. B. Dadabhoy and Mr. Vivian Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. V. Zinjarde, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff alleges that he was wrongfully dispossessed of his field by defendant Pundalik, so that he was compelled to sue him for recovery of possession. Pending that suit Pundalik let the field to defendant Maruti, who actually cultivated it and enjoyed the produce of it. Subsequently, the plaintiff got a decree for possession, and then brought the present suit against both the defendants for damages. The first defendant Pundalik pleaded that he alone had cultivated the land and taken its produce. The second defendant Maruti admitted that he had taken a registered lease of the land from Pundalik, but asserted that he had not gone on the field in pursuance thereof or cultivated the land. The plaintiff replicated that having taken the lease, Maruti was responsible in damages whether or not he cultivated the area. The first Court found that the defendant Maruti had cultivated the land, and gave a decree for damages against both the defendants as joint tort-feasors. Maruti appealed, and the lower Appellate Court, without any analysis of the evidence or legal finding on questions of fact, supposed the case to be governed by the decision in Dukaloo v. Dhularsing (1), and reversed the decree and dismissed the suit against Maruti. The judgment of Neill, J. C., in the case cited, is extremely brief; it enunciates a proposition without any discussion of the law applicable, is unsupported by any authority, and may have to be re-considered in a proper case. But it has no application whatever to the present case. There can be no source of error more fruitful than the practice of drawing analogies from rulings on the land laws of the Central Provinces for the decision of cases governed by the totally different land laws of Berar. A malguzar in the Central Provinces holds the proprietary interest in the tenancy lands of his village, and it may be, as held by Neill, J. C., in the above case, that if he wrongfully ejects a tenant from his holding and lets the same to another person, the tenant's remedy for damages lies only against his landlord and not also against the person who actually cultivates the holding. The only reason given by the learned Judicial Commissioner for the view he took was that the landlord, though a wrong-doer, was still the owner of the land, and the subsequent holder under him could not be regarded as a co-trespasser. That reason has no existence in the case before me. Here Pundalik [who is apparently a co-occupant with the plaintiff and Soneji (P. W. No. 1) of the same survey-number, divided into three parts by metes and bounds] was a trespasser pure and simple upon the land of the plaintiff; and, if the defendant Maruti cultivated the land pending that trespass, he became a joint tort-feasor. The law has been very clearly laid down both in England and in India. In Henderson v. Squire (2) and Doe v. Harlow (3), though the facts were converse to those of the present case, the question being whether the tenant was liable as well as his sub-tenant who actually held over beyond the term of the tenancy against the will of the lessor and despite notice to quit, the ratio decidendi seems to have been this that both the actual trespasser and he who assisted him to trespass were liable in damages. Applying these principles to this case, supposing Maruti the "sub-trespasser" to have actually cultivated the land, his liability for damages would be considered beyond question, and Pundalik would also be liable for having trespassed constructively through his sub-trespasser. The Indian cases are still clearer. In Mudun Mohun Singh v. Ram Dass Chuckerbutty (4) it was decided that where lands are wrongfully withheld from the rightful owner, not only the actual occupiers but also the person who had leased the lands to the actual occupiers, may be held to have committed a joint trespass and to be jointly liable for damages caused by such trespass. The case of Doe v. Harlow (3) was followed. Here again the liability of the actual occupier was accepted as beyond question. In Bireskur Dutt v. Baroda Prasad Ray (5) the rule expounded will be sufficiently evident from the following part of the placitum:—

"Where more persons than one are concerned in the commission of a wrong, the wronged person has his remedy against all or any one or more of them at his choice. Every wrong-doer is liable for the whole damage and it does not matter whether they acted as between themselves as equals or one of them as agent or lessee of another:

"Held, therefore, that a trespasser is liable jointly with his lessees for the entire amount of mesne profits and not merely to the extent of rents realized by him from his lessees."

(2) (1889) 4 Q. B. 170; 10 R. & S. 183; 38 L. J. Q. B. 73; 19 L. T. 60; 17 W. R. 519.

(5) 11 Ind. Cas. 504; 15 C. W. N. 825.

The law is thus clear that if Pundali trespassed, as has now been found, and then let the land trespassed upon to Maruti who cultivated it and took the produce, both are liable for damages caused by the trespass. Maruti has denied the fact of the trespass. The first Court found against him. The lower Appellate Court assumed that finding to be correct in making an order for costs, but that cannot be a legal disposal of the issue.

The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and the case is remanded to that Court for a fresh decision with advertence to the law as now laid down. There will be a refund of Court-fees, since the decision of the lower Appellate Court proceeded on a preliminary point. Other costs here and hitherto will follow the event.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Admission of evidence in appeal—Discretion of Court.

In admitting evidence in appeal the Court should strictly follow the procedure laid down by Order XLI, rule 27, Civil Procedure Code, and specially by the second clause of the rule. [p. 875, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 30th June 1914.

Mr. M. L. Agarwalu, for the Appellants.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for arrears of rent. The only question is as to the rate of rent payable by the said defendants to the plaintiff-respondent. The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree based upon a rate of Rs. 4 9-6 per bigha per annum. On appeal by the plaintiff the District Judge found the rate of rent payable to be Rs. 8 per bigha per annum and amended the decree of the first Court accordingly. In second appeal it is contended that the decision of the District Judge was arrived at after an improper use of the powers of the Court under Order XLII, rule 27 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that is to say, after improperly permitting the plaintiff to produce additional evidence. Secondly, it is contended that the decision is liable to interference in second appeal because it was based on a misinterpretation of the documentary evidence before the Court. These are the only pleas with which I am concerned. I may note that there was a good deal of evidence produced on the question of the rate of rent payable including entries in the patnael's papers and records of past litigation not between the same parties, which were alleged to be relevant to the issue before the Court for various reasons with which I am not concerned. Both parties, however, were agreed that there had been a previous litigation between the predecessors-in-title of the parties to the present suit, in which this very point had been raised and decided. This was a litigation which terminated in a decree of this Court dated January 5th, 1894. A copy of the judgment on which that decree was based was on the record. The important words in the judgment are the following:—"The decree of the Revenue Court in favour of the plaintiff, who as assignee of one Manbahal, the lessee from the admitted landlord, is entitled to recover the rent found due to the landlord from the land admittedly held by the respondent, should be restored". From the context it is clear that by the decree of the Revenue Court was meant the decree of the Assistant Collector in that very case, which had been reversed by the District Judge in first appeal. I do not think it can be said that the lower Appellate Court has misinterpreted these words. The learned District Judge remarks that the judgment of the High Court is silent about the rate of rent. On behalf of the defendants-appellants it is contended that the said judgment is not silent inasmuch as it lays down that the rent recoverable is that due to the landlord from the defendants. The suggestion I take it is that the District

Judge should have gone on to ascertain from the materials on the record what was the rent due to the landlord, that is to say, to the superior proprietor of this land. I think, however, that the learned District Judge has correctly appreciated the situation. The judgment of the High Court did not merely lay down that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the rent due to the landlord, the expression used was "rent found due to the landlord." Read in connection with the context, these words obviously mean the rent which the Assistant Collector found to be due; otherwise this Court in second appeal would not have restored the decree of the Assistant Collector but would have called for a finding as to the rate of rent due. Therefore, the learned District Judge set himself to enquire what was the rent which the Assistant Collector found to be due in the litigation which terminated in this Court's decree of January 5th, 1894. Curiously enough there was no copy of the judgment of the Assistant Collector to be found on the record. The parties had caused to be summoned in the first Court the record of certain previous litigations, and it is possible that a copy of this particular judgment was to be found on one or the other of those files and was made the basis of argument by the parties in the Court of first instance. On the face of the record, however, there appears to be a serious lacuna in the evidence and it was for the District Judge to determine what he ought to do under the circumstances. The case for the present appellants I understand to be that it was the duty of the District Judge to hold the plaintiff responsible for the absence from the record of sufficient evidence as to the amount of the rent found due in the previous litigation. The appeal then before the Court, being an appeal by the plaintiff, would in that case have failed and the decree of the first Court would have been affirmed. The District Judge appears to have permitted, if he did not actually direct, the plaintiff (appellant before his Court) to file a copy of the judgment of the Assistant Collector. This he has endorsed with a simple order admitting it on to the record without giving any reason. That order bears the same date as the judgment which followed upon it and the learned District Judge seems to have thought that the statement of the facts set forth in his judgment was on the face of it sufficient justification for the course adopted by him. It would be better if Courts of first appeal would be content to follow strictly the procedure laid down by Order XLI, rule 27 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and specially by the second clause of the said rule. At the same time, I am not prepared to hold under the circumstances of the present case that the learned District Judge did not exercise a judicial discretion in the admission of this evidence or that he exercised that discretion improperly or irregularly so as to warrant the interference of this Court in second appeal. After all he was dealing with the record of a litigation which had taken place in his own Court. If he had simply sent for the file from his record room for inspection, it is quite probable that no objection would have been taken and yet it is in many ways more convenient that the facts connected with a previous litigation should be proved by the production of certified copies than by the inspection of record which might not come before a higher Court in the case of a subsequent appeal. For these reasons I find no adequate ground for interference in this case and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Buddhist Law—Partition during step-father's lifetime—Practice—Appeal—New defence inconsistent with original, if allowed—Limitation.

A Court should not allow a new plea to be raised in appeal which is inconsistent with the original one in the lower Court. [p. 875 col. 2.]

It is for the Judge to decide questions of law arising in the course of trial and he should not accept a view suggested by Counsel unless satisfied as to its soundness, it being quite different from an admission of fact by Counsel or from his waiving or withdrawing any part of his client's claim under instructions. [p. 876, col. 1.]

Ma Le v. Ma Hmyin 4 Ind. Cas. 298; 5 L. B. R. 112, referred to.

Mr. May Oung, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. R. Connell, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff-appellant was the daughter of Maung Shwe Dok and Ma Ke; the former died in the infancy of the plaintiff-appellant, and Ma Ke then married Maung Wa, the 1st defendant-respondent, by whom she had seven children, the other defendants-respondents. The suit was brought after Ma Ke's death to recover a three-quarters share of certain land alleged to be the joint property of Maung Shwe Dok and Ma Ke and a one-eighth share of other lands acquired during the marriage between Maung Wa and Ma Ke.

The defence set up was that all the property was acquired during Ma Ke's second marriage, and that the suit was barred by limitation, time running from the date of Ma Ke's death which occurred over 15 years before the suit was filed.

The plaintiff alleged that Ma Ke's death occurred only some 10 years before the suit and the lower Court found that it occurred less than 12 years before and that the suit was in time. It held that a portion only of the property alleged by plaintiff to have belonged to Maung Shwe Dok and Ma Ke did so belong, and that all the rest was acquired during the second marriage and granted a decree for a three-fourths share of the former and one-eighth of the latter.

Maung Wa and one only of his children appealed and they raised an entirely new defence, which they ought not to have been allowed to do and one which was totally inconsistent with their main defence of limitation, namely, that the suit for a share of property acquired during the marriage of Maung Wa and Ma Ke was premature, and could not be brought before Maung Wa's death. The plaintiff's legal adviser acceded to this proposition of law and the Divisional Judge accepted it without discussion as to its soundness, and in the result, having held that all the property was acquired during the second marriage, he dismissed the suit entirely. I must point that it is for the Judge to decide questions of law which arise in the course of the trial, and that he should not accept a view of it suggested by Counsel unless satisfied of its soundness. It is quite a different matter from an admission of fact by Counsel, or from his waiving or withdrawing any part of his client's claim under instructions. In this case, as remarked above, the defence ought not to have been allowed to be raised at all at this late stage of the proceedings, and from the fact that it had never been suggested before, it behoved the Judge to consider it with particular care before deciding it. An attempt has been made in this appeal to bolster up this defence by arguing that as children cannot claim partition of their parent's estate during the life-time of either parent a step-child should not be in a better position; and that though the Dhammathats declare the shares to be allotted on such a partition being made, they do not expressly say a partition can be claimed. So far as I am aware that is the usual form in which the case is stated in the Dhammathats, and the declaration that a person is entitled to a certain share connotes that he may sue for it. Section 230 of Volume I of the Digest of Buddhist Law is quite clear on the point, and leaves no doubt whatever that the partition can be claimed during the step-father's life-time, as he is allotted the largest share. Mi So v. Ma Hmat Tha (1) is in point, and there are doubtless numerous other cases. The decision of the District Court that the suit is premature is reversed.

At the hearing of this appeal appellant's Counsel accepted the Divisional Court's finding of facts that all the property in suit was acquired during the 2nd marriage. Appellant's share of all of it is, therefore, one-eighth. The Divisional Court expressly held the suit not barred by limitation. At the hearing of this appeal the respondent's Counsel desired to support the dismissal of the suit as barred by limitation. Under rule 22 of Order XLI he was not really entitled to do this as he had filed no cross-objection in the time allowed. But Appellant's Counsel raised no objection to the point being raised, and he was afforded an opportunity of quoting further ruling, and of being heard again on the point. I have, therefore, considered it, and have not the slightest doubt that the suit was in time.

Upon the evidence I consider the Sub-Divisional Court's finding as to the date of Ma Ke's death was palpably wrong. There can be no doubt whatever that she died more than 12 years before the suit was brought, but since her death the plaintiff and her step-brothers and sisters have admittedly been working all the lands in suit in turns by mutual agreement, and, therefore, it is perfectly obvious that there has been no possession adverse to the plaintiff. [See Ma Le v. Ma Hmyin (2).]

The appeal is allowed and there will be a decree for a one-eighth share of all the plaint lands in favour of the plaintiff, with costs in all Courts calculated on that basis.

Appeal allowed.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gorakhpur.

Mr. Narmadeshwar Prasad Upadhia (for Dr. Surendra Nath Sen), for the Appellants.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A copy of the decree appealed against has now been put upon the record. It was filed before this Court on the 30th of July 1915, and I understand that when it was filed there was no explanation supported by an affidavit or otherwise as to the reason why it was filed so long after the time granted in the Indian Limitation Act. The ordinary time for the filing of this appeal expired a few days after the 1st of November 1914. As I have shown in my order of the 28th July 1915, the memorandum of appeal was not accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed against. It was accompanied by the copy of a decree passed in a case with which apparently it was intimately connected, and the fact that the decree, with one exception to which I shall presently refer, was the same as the decree which was passed in this case allows the inference that though there must have been negligence on the part of those who filed the memorandum of appeal, yet that negligence was one which might easily have occurred. But when one turns to the final words of the decree it will be found that the decree in the present case, namely No. 65/78, differs toto cælo from the decree which was passed in case No. 78/65. Whoever is responsible for the preparation of the papers constituting the memorandum of appeal must have done so in such a perfunctory manner that the Court is unable to hold that the appellants had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the period of limitation prescribed therefor. This view of the case is strengthened when it appears that on the 3rd of November 1914, the appellants applied to the Court below for a copy of the decree and the copy of the decree was given on the same day. Even if the mistake had not been noticed before, it is difficult to understand how it was that when this copy was procured the mistake was not discovered. The learned Vakil for the respondents in support of his preliminary objection refers me to the case of Gulab Devi v. Shanker Lal (1), in which an appeal was admitted by a District Judge acting on a mistaken report of his office. The learned Judges in connection with this observe that the Judge did not admit the appeal under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877 and could not have done, so as there were no materials before him by which the appellant could have satisfied him that the appellant had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the period of limitation. While it is true that the words sufficient cause in section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act should receive liberal construction so as to advance substantial justice when no negligence or inaction or want of bona fides is imputable to the appellant, see Rakhal Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Ghosh (2). I find it quite impossible in the present case to hold that there has been no negligence, nor inaction, nor want of bona fides on the part of the appellants. The whole procedure in the case so far as the appellants are concerned was slack to the utmost extent. They now propose to file an affidavit. If I give them permission to do that I should be encouraging slackness. The preliminary objection must be allowed and is allowed. This appeal is dismissed with costs.

A breach of a covenant for title caused by the absence of right contracted for is entire and complete at the time of the execution of the conveyance, and, therefore, the Statute of Limitations in such a case in the absence of fraud begins to run in the covenantor's favour as from the date of the execution of the sale-deed. [p. 878, col. 2; p. 879, col. 1.]

First appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Seoni, dated the 31st July 1914.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. Mittra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Yusuf Mohammed Khan, the son of Sirajobi, married Wazirbi, by whom he had three daughters Nasib Begum, Jamal Begum and Kamal Begum. On the 24th May 1897 Yusuf Mohammed Khan sold the whole sixteen annas of Mauza Sagar by a registered sale-deed to Pirbhu and Rupchand, now represented by the plaintiffs-appellants Pirbhu and the sons of Rupchand.

It is admitted by both sides in this Court that the sale-deed contains an express covenant of title Yusuf Mohammed Khan died in 1901, and Sirajobi in 1903. Suit No. 20 of 1907 was brought by the three daughters of Yusuf Mohammed Khan to recover an eight-anna share of the village, on the ground that they were the heirs of their grandmother Sirajobi who owned an eight-anna share. The claim was decreed and this Court dismissed the second appeal of the then defendants, the present defendants, on the 12th November 1912. This suit decided that Yusuf Mohammed Khan had no title in eight annas of the sixteen annas sold. The present suit has been brought against Wazirbi and other legal representatives of Yusuf Mohammed Khan, as a result of the former suit. Several reliefs are claimed by the plaintiffs; the only relief with which we are now concerned is the claim for damages for breach of the covenant of title. Other reliefs are undoubtedly time-barred. The learned District Judge, in a well-reasoned judgment, has held that the suit, in so far as it is a suit for damages for breach of covenant of title, is governed by Article 116 of the Limitation Schedule, and that limitation began to run from the day on which the sale-deed was executed. On this finding the suit has been dismissed as time-barred.

The learned Counsel for the appellants, while admitting that Article 116 governs the case, contends that the period of limitation began to run from the date when the decree of this Court finally decided that Yusuf Mohammed Khan had no title as regards eight annas of the sixteen annas conveyed. In support of his proposition the learned Counsel relies on Bahadur Lal v. Jadha (1), where limitation began to run from the date of the decree settling the question that the vendor had no title. But in that case the parties agreed as to the date from which time began to run, and Imay, J. C., held that the view appeared to be correct, in view of the special terms of the deed which contained an express covenant, not in the terms of a covenant of title, but to reimburse the vendee all costs incurred in discharging the encumbrance and in obtaining possession of the property sold. There was certainly no judicial pronouncement that in a case like the present time would begin to run, not from the date of the sale-deed, but from the date when the vendee was dispossessed by the true owner. The learned Counsel has also cited Krishnan Nambiar v. Kannan (2) and Zemindar of Vizianar, Ram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrule (3). But in both these cases, in which Article 116 was held applicable to a suit of the present kind, no question arose as to when time began to run, as the suits were brought within six years of the execution of the deed.

A reference to Williams on the Law of Vendors and Purchasers and Dart on the Law and Practice relating to Vendors and Purchasers shows that there is a very strong balance of authority, that a breach of a covenant for title caused by the absence of the right contracted for is entire and complete at the time of the execution of the conveyance, so that the Statute of Limitations will begin to run in the covenantor's favour as from that date. I would refer specially to the cases of Spoor v. Green (4) and Turner v. Moon (5). In the latter case Joyce, J., adopts the view taken by Baron Bramwell in the former case of the meaning of the judgment of Lord Ellenborough in Kingdon v. Nottle (6). Baron Bramwell makes it clear that Lord Ellenborough was not considering the question of limitation at all. This is important in view of the fact that the learned Counsel for the appellants, Dr. Goar, relies on the arguments contained in the latter part of paragraph 106E of the 4th edition of his valuable work on the Law of Transfer, where he relies on the words of Lord Ellenborough.

With reference to the hypothetical extreme case put by him at the end of the above cited paragraph, it seems that the case would be one of fraud, when limitation would be saved by the principles embodied in section 18 of the Limitation Act. The same principles are expressed in Gibbs v. Guild (7); if the breach of covenant were fraudulently concealed by the covenantor, according to the law the Statute will not begin to run until the time when the fraud was, or might with reasonable diligence have been, discovered. In the present case no pleading of fraud has been made by the appellants, and the circumstances contra-indicate fraud, for the plaintiff Pirbhu admits as a witness that he knew that half of the property stood in the revenue registers in the name of Sirajobi.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63
—Decree below Rs. 5,000—Suit valued above Rs. 25,000
—Jurisdiction.

The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that the property in suit, which she claimed under a sale-deed, was not liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of the decree held by defendant No. 1 against defendant No. 2. The decree was for Rs. 2,000. The suit was valued at Rs. 25,000. The suit was decreed. The defendant preferred an appeal to the High Court.

Held, that the proper valuation of the suit was Rs. 2,000 and, therefore, the appeal lay to the District Judge, and not to the High Court. (p. 880, col. 2.)

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Agra, dated the 1st August 1913.

Messrs. Shyam Krishna Das and Narain Prasad Ashthana, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapra and Messrs. Ibn Ahmad and Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first question which arises in this appeal is whether the appeal lies to this Court. For the decision of that question we have to determine what was the value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court below. If the amount of that value was below Rs. 5,000, the appeal would not lie to this Court but lay to the Court of the District Judge. The suit was brought under the following circumstances. The first defendant, who is the appellant here, holds a decree against the second defendant, the husband of the plaintiff-respondent. In execution of that decree he caused the property in suit to be attached as the property of his judgment-debtor. An objection was preferred by the plaintiff claiming the property under a sale-deed alleged to have been executed in her favour on the 22nd of May 1912. Her objection having been overruled, she brought the present suit on the 4th of January 1913 and asked for a declaration that the property in suit "was not liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of the amount due to defendant

MEGHRAJ F. JOHNSON.

No. 1," and she also prayed that her right to the property be declared. She alleged the date of the cause of action to be the 4th of January 1912. No doubt she made her husband a party to the suit, but she asked for no relief against him and did not allege any cause of action which would entitle her to sue him. Apparently her husband was only made a formal defendant to the suit. The lower Court decreed her claim and the decree-holder, the defendant No. 1, has preferred this appeal. No doubt in the plaint the value of the subject-matter for purposes of jurisdiction is stated to be Rs. 25,000 but this, in our opinion, was clearly erroneous. As we have already said the plaintiff claims no relief against her husband and she does not allege any cause of action as against him. All that she asks for is that it be declared that the amount of the decree held by the first defendant ought not to be realized from her property, that is, from so much of it the value of which would be equivalent to the amount of the decree. It is admitted in this case that the amount of the decree is about Rs. 2,000. It is, therefore, clear that the object of the suit is to relieve the property from a burden to the amount of Rs. 2,000 which the decree-holder, defendant No. 1, is seeking to impose on it by attaching the property. The whole of the property is not in dispute and under the attachment and the sale which might take place in pursuance of it, the whole property cannot be sold but only so much of it as will be sufficient for the realization of the amount of the decree. Therefore, the value of the subject-matter of the suit is the amount of the decree, and not the amount of the actual value of the property or the value for which the plaintiff alleges that she purchased it. The matter was decided by this Court in the case of Dwarka Das v.ameshar Prasad (1), and the same view was adopted in Dhan Devi v. Zamurad Begum (2). The matter was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case of Phul Kumari v. Ghanshyam Misra (3). The exact point which is now before us was not in issue before their Lordships, but there are observations in the judgment which clearly support the view taken by this Court. Their Lordships say, "the value of the action must mean the value to the plaintiff. But the value of the property might quite well be Rs. 1,000, while the execution debt was Rs. 10,000. It is only if the execution debt is less than the value of the property that its amount affects the value of the suit." In the case before us the amount of the decree is below Rs. 5,000 and much below the actual value of the property. Therefore, according to the view expressed by their Lordships, the value of the suit should be regarded as the amount of the decree. That amount being less than Rs. 5,000 an appeal from the decree of the Courts below lay to the District Judge and not to this Court. We accordingly direct that the memorandum of appeal be returned to the appellant for presentation to the proper Court. Under the circumstances we make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Mr. M. R. Boble, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. J. Balm, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of so much of a decree passed by the Small Cause Court, Nagpur, as refuses the plaintiff any part of his costs, although as to the greater part of his claim he was successful.

The suit was brought on a promissory note payable on demand and not at any specified place. It was executed by the defendant on the 20th November 1911. Several oral demands for payment were made by the plaintiff's servant Govind Rao (P. W. No. 2), and finally on the 22nd April 1913 a notice was sent to the defendant which he received two days later. On the 30th April the defendant sent the plaintiff by registered post a letter in the following terms:—

"Your registered notice to hand. I was surprised to receive it, as I never refused to settle your account. Your servant came to me on 2 or 3 occasions and he was told to ask you to call and make up accounts. Will you, therefore, come over and make up accounts and meanwhile send me a memo. showing (1) the amount originally borrowed and the date on which it was handed over to me, (2) the amounts received by you in payment of the loan and (3) balance due up to the end of April?"

The plaintiff received this letter on the 2nd May, but neither sent a reply nor complied with the defendant's request. The suit was filed on the 19th August 1913.

Interest was claimed at the rate of 3 per cent. per mensem, but the defendant pleaded that 1 per cent. per mensem was the rate agreed upon and the lower Court found in his favour on this point. A further plea was taken to the effect that the defendant should not be held liable for interest after the 30th April 1913 or for the plaintiff's costs of suit. In this connection the defendant's written statement contains the following:—

"As the transaction was entered into by the plaintiff in person with the defendant at the latter's bungalow and as it was the practice in previous dealings between the parties to make up the accounts at the defendant's house, the defendant naturally expected the plaintiff to comply with his request in the letter and was ready with the amount wherewith to pay the plaintiff."

According to the lower Court's judgment the points for determination thus raised are:—

"Is the plaintiff entitled to interest up to the 19th August 1913 or up to the 30th April 1913?"

"Can the plaintiff demand costs of this suit under the circumstances of the case?"

The former was found against the defendant on the ground that he neither made a legal tender before suit of the sum he considered due nor deposited that sum in Court during the trial. But the plaintiff's costs were disallowed in toto for the following reasons:—

"The letter and the acknowledgment filed by the defendant clearly show that the plaintiff is to blame for this litigation. If he had gone to the defendant as he was accustomed to do, this suit would not have been filed, as the defendant was ready to settle the matter before coming to Court."

The general rule as to costs is that they should follow the event. This is plain from section 35 of the Civil Procedure Code, and was also held in Musammatt Ima v. Musammatt Kallu (1). The lower Court has stated in writing its reasons for not following this general rule and so far has complied with section 35 of the Code. The plaintiff-applicant's contention, however, is that the reasons given find no adequate support in the facts on record, and if this is correct, this Court should, I think, interfere on the principle laid down in Bhaiyalal v. Jumnadas (2).

Now it is not contended that as a matter of law the plaintiff was bound to attend at the defendant's bungalow to demand payment. Under the exception to section 64, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, no presentment of the note was necessary in order to make the defendant chargeable thereon. The words "on demand" do not constitute a condition precedent, but merely import that the debt is due and payable immediately, and it is for this reason that the period of limitation applicable runs from the date of the instrument, not from the time of the demand: see Article 73 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, Jeannissa Lodli Begam v. Manikji Khursetji (3) and Perumal Ayyan v. Alagirisami Bhagavathar (4). The law of England is the same and will be found stated in Byles on Bills (page 321, 17th edition) and in Norton v. Ellam (5). In both countries, however, the creditor who commences an action without having first demanded payment may properly be saddled with the costs of the trial, if the debtor was all along willing to pay: see Macintosh v. Haydon (6). In so far as the plaintiff had as a matter of courtesy been accustomed to visit the defendant personally to state his claims, the defendant had ample notice before suit that this should no longer be expected. There is really no room for any suggestion that the defendant did not know what he had to pay. The plaintiff's servant was ready to show the accounts, and no accounting was in fact necessary, seeing that even up to the date of the lower Court's judgment no payment was ever made. It is not suggested that the defendant did not know the date or amount of the note or the rate of interest he had agreed to pay, and under the general rule embodied in section 49 of the Indian Contract Act, it is for the debtor to seek out the creditor for purposes of performance: see Ganesh v. Sidhakaran (7). Had the plaintiff complied with the defendant's request, it is certain that the parties would not have agreed as to the amount payable by way of interest, and no less certain that the defendant, however, ostensibly willing to discharge his debt, would not in fact have done so. As to the latter point, I need only refer to the facts that nothing was paid into Court at the trial under Order XXIV of the first Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, and that at the defendant's request the decree was for payment by two instalments, the first not falling due till nearly a month after conclusion of the trial. Having regard to the illustrations in rule 4 (2) of the said Order, I am clearly of opinion that in a case like the present it was improper to deprive the plaintiff of all his costs. The defendant should have tendered what he considered due, and just as he has been made to pay interest up to the date of the suit, so he should be ordered to pay so much of the plaintiff's costs as corresponds necessarily to the latter's success, namely, Court-fee (Rs. 48) on the sum decreed, Pleader's fee (Rs. 31-8-0) on the said sum, Court-fee (8 annas) on the wakalatnama, and process-fee (8 annas) for summons to the defendant, total Rs. 80-8-0. No more than this is asked for by the plaintiff in this Court.

The decree of the Small Cause Court is modified by substituting for the direction that each party do bear his own costs a direction that the defendant do pay Rs. 80-8-0 out of the plaintiff's costs and that otherwise costs be borne as incurred. The defendant will pay the costs of the application to this Court. I allow Rs. 15 as Pleader's fee.

Decree modified.

Partition—Party required to file civil suit—Failure to file civil suit—Order—Appeal—Jurisdiction.

The applicant applied in the Revenue Court against the defendant claiming partition. The defendant objected that the applicant's share was less than what he claimed. The Collector made an order under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act, requiring the defendant to bring a suit in the Civil Court within three months to determine the question. This was not done. After the expiry of three months, the case again came up before the Collector. The defendant alleged that the decision of the Civil Court for partition in respect of the non-revenue paying property of the parties had settled the question. The Collector overruled this objection. The defendant appealed to the District Judge.

Held, that no appeal lay to the District Judge.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—This appeal arises under the following circumstances. Mukand Lal presented an application in the Revenue Court against Har Prasad, alleging that he was entitled to $\frac{2}{3}$ ths of the recorded property and claiming partition. Har Prasad filed an objection that Mukand Lal's share was only one-half and the other half belonged to him. This matter having come before the Collector he made an order under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act requiring Har Prasad to bring a suit in the Civil Court within three months to determine the question. Har Prasad never brought any such suit. He alleges, however, that there was pending in the Civil Court a suit for partition brought by Mukand Lal in respect of non-revenue paying property, and that it was decided in that suit that they constituted a joint Hindu family and were, therefore, on partition entitled to all the joint property half and half. After the expiry of three months when the case again came before the Collector, it was found that Har Prasad had not complied with the order. He tried to make out that the finding of the Civil Court had settled the question. The Collector made an order in which he stated that the Civil Court's decision had nothing to do with the revenue-paying property. The Collector accordingly overruled the objection which had been filed by Har Prasad. Against this order Har Prasad filed an appeal in the District Judge's Court. The District Judge held that no appeal lay to him and returned the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court. Section 111 of the Revenue Act provides that when an objection is made by a recorded co-sharer involving a question of proprietary title, one of three courses is open to the Collector: he may either decline to grant the application until the question be settled by a competent Court, or he may require any party to the case to institute a suit in the Civil Court within three months to settle the question or he may proceed to enquire into the merits of the objection himself. Clause (3) provides that if this last-mentioned course is adopted the Collector is to follow the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of original suits, and in that case an appeal lies to the District Judge (Section 112). It is clear that no appeal lies to the District Judge when the Collector makes an order under clauses (a) and (b) of section 111 (1). Clause (2) provides that if the Collector requires a party to bring a suit within three months and he fails to comply with the requisition, the Collector must decide the question against him. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that he substantially complied with the order of the Collector directing him to institute a suit. We find that all he did was to put in a defence to the effect that the family was a joint family and that the suit should be dismissed on the ground that all the family property had not been included in the suit. It is stated (probably correctly) that the result of this defence was that Mukand Lal's suit for partition in the Civil Court was dismissed. In our opinion what Har Prasad did was in no way a compliance with the order of the Collector directing Har Prasad to institute a suit in the Civil Court within three months. Even if we assume that Har Prasad substantially complied with the order of the Collector and that the latter should have decided in favour of Har Prasad, the section does not provide for an appeal in such case to the District Judge. We think the Court below was right. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A. V. P. FIRM—INSOLVENT—RESPONDENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 22—Receiver—Court's functions—Remedy of purchaser in auction.

Section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not contemplate that a lengthy inquiry should be held in a complaint against the irregularities of a sale held by a Receiver in an insolvency case as if the matter was a regular claim for specific performance. Under that section the Court simply ratifies, reverses or modifies the executive acts of its officer and any order under that section does not preclude a party from pursuing his ordinary remedy by a suit for specific performance against the Receiver.

Mr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. R. Connell, for V. T. Sithambaran Chetty, Creditor.

Mr. Chari, for S. H. Chetty firm, Creditor.

JUDGMENT.—The firm of A. V. P. at Moulmein was declared insolvent. A Receiver was appointed to sell the assets. There was some immoveable property in the Ramnad District. The Receiver at Moulmein appointed the Official Receiver of Ramnad and Madura to sell the property as his agent. The property was put up for auction at Madura and the appellant was the highest bidder. Complaints were made to the Receiver at Moulmein and also to his agent, the Official Receiver of Madura, that the property had been sold for less than its value, owing to the sale not having been properly published. The Receiver at Moulmein accordingly refused to complete the sale and convey the property. The appellant applied to the District Judge of Amherst under section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to order the Receiver to complete the sale. The learned Judge after reading the report of the Receiver and the correspondence between the Receiver and his agent, the Official Receiver of Madura, refused to interfere with the action of the Receiver; and the appellant now appeals from the District Judge's order of refusal.

He complains that a proper enquiry was not held under section 22 and that he was not given the opportunity of adducing evidence that the sale was unconditional and that the proclamation of sale was duly published. Section 22 does not require the Court to hold any enquiry. The section does not contemplate that a lengthy enquiry should be held as if the matter was a regular claim for specific performance. Under that section, the Court simply ratifies; reverses or modifies the executive acts of its officer; and any order under that section does not preclude a party from pursuing his ordinary civil remedy. The District Court was of opinion prima facie that the sale had not been properly advertised; that the purchaser, the appellant, was very probably acting on behalf of the insolvent, and that it was through the action of the insolvent that the inadequate price was obtained. The Court apparently overlooked the statement of the Official Receiver of Madura in his letter to the Receiver at Moulmein, stating that the sale was made subject to confirmation of the Receiver at Moulmein. In that case, the appellant has no cause to complain; the Receiver at Moulmein has thought fit not to confirm the sale. Under section 22, the Court would be entitled to accept that statement by the Official Receiver of Madura as a fact, without postponing the enquiry to enable the complainant to adduce evidence to the contrary. The appellant has the remedy by a suit against the Receiver for specific performance, if he is so advised.

This appeal is dismissed with costs, three gold mohurs.

of father - Land re-let to minor son - Joint family - Continuous possession - Occupancy right.

When a father was ejected under section 58 of the Tenancy Act and immediately after the land was leased to his son aged sixteen who was joint with his father:

Held, that the re-letting was in fact a re-admission of the father to the holding within the meaning of section 13 of the Tenancy Act.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 3rd October 1912, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Allahabad District, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(August 18th 1913.)—The father of appellant was ejected by a suit in 1904 from the land now in question. A lease was then given in the name of the appellant, who appears to have been from the evidence at the time 16 years of age and who was certainly joint with his father. It appears to me to be beyond doubt that the re-letting was in fact a re-admission of the father to the holding within the meaning of section 13 of the Tenancy Act and as it took place within a year from the date of the ejectment, there was no break in the continuity of the occupation of this land. To hold otherwise is to provide an obvious and easy method of making the provisions of section 13 useless. The father has since died and the son succeeded him in the holding.

I would allow this appeal, cancel the order of the Commissioner and restore that of the Court of first instance. Costs on respondent.

TWEEDY, J. M.—The son to whom the lease was given was a minor and incapable of making contract and this important point was not noticed by the Commissioner. He had also no separate holding and was joint with his father. In view of this fact and considering that the lease was a wholly invalid document, I am prepared to agree in holding that the father was re-admitted to the tenancy and I would decree the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Mortgage—Redemption, suit for—Burden of proof—Court's duty in such cases.

In a suit for redemption, the plaintiff when he is put to strict proof and is out of possession, must stand or fall by the strength of his evidence and cannot depend upon the weakness of his adversary's case. In such cases it is absolutely wrong to deal with the case of the defendant first and prove it to be worthless and then turn to that of the plaintiff. The Court should see whether the plaintiff has discharged the burden lying upon him; his case cannot be held to be true because the defendant has failed to prove his defence. [p. 885, col. 2.]

Ma Ya v. Maung Kyauk, B. S. J. 482; Pa Shwe Aung v. Pa To Bya, B. S. J. 494, referred to.

Mr. J. E. Lambert, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent Maung So sued the appellant La Aung for redemption of two pieces of land. Maung So's case was that his mother, Mi Than Da Bon, mortgaged the lands to her brother, Maung Hnaung, some 25 years ago for the sum of Rs. 200 on condition that Maung Hnaung should take possession of the lands and enjoy the profits thereof in lieu of interest on the loan. Both Mi Than Da Bon and Maung Hnaung are dead. La Aung is Maung Hnaung's son. In his defence he says that he does not know whether there was a mortgage or not and puts the plaintiff to strict proof thereof.

Now, the onus of proof is very heavily on the plaintiff, so much so that he must stand or fall upon the evidence he produces and cannot depend upon the weakness of his adversary's case. See Ma Ya v. Maung Kyauk (1) and Pa Shwe Aung v. Pa To Bya (2). In a case like this, it is absolutely a wrong method to deal, as the lower Appellate Court appears to have done, with the case of the defendant first and prove it to be worthless and then turn to that of the plaintiff, as if the Court had to say whether the one or the other of the two cases is true. All that the Court has to do is to say whether the plaintiff has discharged the onus which is upon him, his case cannot be held to be true because the defendant has failed to prove his defence, nor can one relax the strictness with which one has to approach the plaintiff's case because of the weakness of the defence.

Let us now consider the evidence adduced by the plaintiff.

He himself says that he was present at the mortgage but does not say who else was present. At any rate, he has not produced any witness who was present on the occasion.

Obviously, his evidence alone is not sufficient. His witness Thauk Ka Pyu says that, though he was not present when the loan was given, he one day heard Mi Than Da Bon say to Maung Hnaung, "You can enjoy the lands, but you must give me back the lands when I want to redeem them." He also says that, when he heard this, the money had been paid 2 or 3 days before. What led to this statement by Mi Than Da Bon and how the witness knew that the money had been paid, the record does not show. When he gave the evidence he was 49. So he must have been 24 or so when the transfer of the land took place. Even if he was present when there was a conversation between Mi Than Da Bon and Maung Hnaung about the lands, it is difficult to see how he could remember the terms of it 25 years afterwards, when we know that he could not have been—he does not say he was—called in to witness a transaction which was going to take place. On reading his evidence carefully, one gets the idea that he must have been, if at all, present quite casually, so that there would be no reason why he should afterwards remember anything at all about it. I consider his evidence worthless.

Some reliance has been placed upon the admitted fact that Maung Hnaung shortly before his death said that the plaintiff might be allowed to redeem the property. In my judgment this does not prove the transfer to be a mortgage. Maung Hnaung and Mi Than Da Bon were brother and sister and it might be that Maung Hnaung wanted his nephew, the plaintiff, to have his mother's lands, if he could pay the money for which the transfer was made. The issue involved cannot be held to be proved by such evidence of admission alone.

I hold that the plaintiff has failed to prove his case.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed. The respondent will pay costs throughout.

Decree reversed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. X.I, c. 1—Appeals, separate, by two sets of defendants—Appeal by one set, dismissal of—Appeal, hearing of, by other set—Discretion of Court to dismiss suit as against all defendants.

The plaintiff filed a suit for possession against two sets of defendants and obtained a decree in the first Court. Both the sets of defendants filed separate appeals on different dates. The appeal filed by one set of defendants was heard and dismissed. Subsequently the appeal filed by the other set of defendants was taken up. The Additional District Judge who heard the latter appeal being of opinion that the plaintiff had no title to the property, dismissed the suit as against all the defendants.

Held, that the Judge had the discretion under Order XLI, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code to dismiss the suit as against both sets of defendants. [p. 888, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 26th May 1914.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of possession over immoveable property. In the array of parties originally impleaded there were five defendants of the first party, seven defendants of the second party and one defendant of the third party. Of this last it is sufficient to say that she was alleged to have a joint right with the plaintiffs to the property in suit, and was impleaded because she declined to join in the suit. The plaint does not disclose any difference in the position of the defendants first party and the defendants second party except in so far as it alleges that the defendants first party have filed a collusive suit against the defendants second party. On the question of the existing possession over the property in suit the plaint merely says that the possession of the defendants first party and second party is wrongful. The Court of first instance decreed the suit on the 20th of September 1912. Separate appeals were filed by the defendants first party and by the defendants second party. The appeal of the former was filed on the 18th of November 1912 and that of the latter was filed on the 26th of November 1912. This appeal was transferred to the Court of the Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur sitting at Basti and was dismissed by him on the 4th of February 1913. In the meantime the appeal of the defendants first party remained pending, its connection with the other appeal having apparently been overlooked. It was, however, transferred to the Court of the Additional District Judge and was disposed of on the 26th of May 1914 by the successor of the learned Additional District Judge who had dealt with the appeal of the defendants second party. On the most important issue of fact in the case, an issue which involved the entire title of the plaintiffs to the property in dispute, the learned Additional Judge who held charge of that office in the month of May 1914, came to a conclusion diametrically opposite to that arrived at by his predecessor in the month of February 1913. Finding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their title to the land in dispute he accepted the appeal of the defendants first party and dismissed the suit altogether. The plaintiffs have come to this Court in second appeal. The plea taken to the effect that the District Judge of Gorakhpur had no jurisdiction to decide the appeal seems to be based on some misapprehension. The plea to the effect that the decision of February 4th, 1913, operates as res judicata against the defendants first party seems to me quite unsustainable. It was a decision to which they were no parties, and it was actually arrived at while the question in issue was under adjudication on the appeal filed by them on November 18th, 1912. It was further contended that, in any case, the Additional District Judge who decided the appeal of the defendants first party ought not to have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit altogether, but should have so framed his decree as to maintain for the plaintiffs the benefit of the dismissal of the appeal brought by the defendants second party. The course taken by this litigation in the lower Appellate Court was certainly unfortunate and the result arrived at appears anomalous. Nevertheless I am not clear that the plaintiffs are entitled to any relief from this Court. They are themselves mainly responsible for the curious result of the litigation in the lower Appellate Court. The defendants first party and the defendants second party had each availed themselves independently of a right undoubtedly secured to them by Order XLI, rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that is to say, each set of defendants had appealed from the whole decree, on the ground that the said decree proceeded upon a ground which was common as against all the defendants. There is no necessary presumption that either set of defendants was cognizant of the filing of the appeal by the other set. The plaintiffs on the other hand must have received notice of both the appeals, and it was apparently remiss on their part, as it was certainly unfortunate for them, that they did not invite the attention of the Court below to the advisability of hearing both the appeals together. As matters turned out the Additional District Judge who took cognizance in the month of May 1914 of the appeal filed by the defendants first party was possessed of the discretion reserved to a Court of Appeal by Order XLI, rule 4, above referred to. Having decided against the plaintiffs a point which went to the root of their title, it would certainly have been anomalous for him to so frame his decree as to allow the plaintiffs to claim possession against one set of defendants. If the defendants second party had never filed an appeal at all the decision of the Court of first instance would have become final against them. Yet the Appellate Court would have been clearly entitled to exercise, on the appeal of the defendants first party, the discretion conferred upon it by Order XLI, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code. There is no provision of law which lays down that this discretion is taken away in the event of an unsuccessful appeal by one defendant or set of defendants, and I do not find myself able to formulate any principle of law which would take away that discretion. The dismissal of the appeal filed by the defendants second party in no way affects the principle that the decree of the Court of first instance had not become final against the defendants first party so long as their appeal against the same remained undisposed of on the file of the Additional District Judge of Gorakhpur, and if that decree had not become final it remained subject to the discretion conferred upon an Appellate Court by Order XLI, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code. This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Alien enemy—License to trade—Suits, right to bring.

An alien enemy who has been licensed to trade in British India, has access to the Courts and may bring suits.

Schaffinius v. Soldberg, (1915) T. L. R. 31, referred to.

FACTS of the case appear from the following Order of Reference made by the Judge, Small Cause Court, Toungoo:—

"The facts of the case are, that one M. Meyer, who is a Turkish Jew, born in Bagdad, in Asia Minor, files a suit for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 13-8-0 due by the defendant Mrs. Lea, for balance of price of the goods sold and delivered to her by the plaintiff.

The defendant admits purchasing goods as alleged by the plaintiff, but she denies owing any sum to the plaintiff, as she has fully discharged her debt. She also contends that the plaintiff being an alien enemy, has no right to sue.

The plaintiff obtained on the 21st April 1915 a license to continue his business of a shop-keeper. The license does not indicate that the plaintiff can institute a suit in a Court for the recovery of any sum. From reading the license of the plaintiff, I am of opinion that the plaintiff has no right to sue, but I am doubtful whether I am correct in my view.

I, therefore, most respectfully beg to refer this point for the decision of the Hon'ble Judges of the Chief Court, under Order XLVI, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

JUDGMENT.

ORMOND, J.—In view of the decision in Schaffinius v. Soldberg (1) I would answer the question referred to this Court in the affirmative.

TWOMEY, J.—It is quite clear from the case cited by Mr. Justice Ormond that an "alien enemy" who has been licensed to carry on his trade or business in British India has access to the Courts and may bring a suit. Meyer may, therefore, sue.

Reference answered in affirmative.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover Rs. 25 rent in respect of 5 karies of grazing land let out by him to the defendant. The defendant denied that he had agreed to pay any rent to the plaintiff and alleged that the land was Government waste land. The Township Court gave a decree to the plaintiff. On appeal, the District Court remanded the case to the Township Judge to enquire in his capacity as Revenue Officer whether the plaintiff had acquired the status of a landholder. The Township Officer found that it was Government waste land in occupation of the plaintiff who had not acquired the status of a landholder and reported to the District Court, who then dismissed the suit on the ground that Civil Courts have no jurisdiction. Plaintiff now appeals.

The question whether the plaintiff had acquired the status of a landholder does not arise in this case, and from the recent Full Bench decision in Maung Naic v. Ma Shwe Hmat (1) it is clear that if A lets out land to B, though he has no title in law to the land, he can recover rent from B (i. e., defendant). The Civil Courts have jurisdiction in the present case, even though the land was Government waste land. It is contended by the respondent's Advocate that there is no sufficient evidence to establish the tenancy between the defendant and the plaintiff. Plaintiff's case, I think, is that he bought this land from Abdul Ywathugyi who, perhaps, was Abdul Gafar referred to in the cross-examination of the 2nd witness for the defendant. The only evidence that the plaintiff produced to show that there was an agreement by the defendant to pay him rent for this land, is the evidence of two witnesses who say they went with the defendant to the plaintiff and agreed to take a certain number of karies at Rs. 5 a kani for grazing. If the land was Government waste land in the ordinary sense, i. e., not occupied by any one, there is a strong presumption that one individual would not agree to pay rent to another individual for such land. Plaintiff should have called the previous owner or occupier of this land from whom, he says, he bought it; and he could probably have called previous tenants of his. The evidence is very meagre, as it stands, as to any agreement by the defendant to pay rent; and it would appear that the land in fact is Government waste land. In my opinion, the plaintiff has not made out his case. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where in a suit for enhancement there was nothing on the record to give information as to how the rates applied were obtained or what was the exemplar area accepted or how the rates were worked out:

Held, that there was no proper trial by the Court below, inasmuch as the tenants were entitled to demand that the enquiry should conclusively show that the rates applied were actually the rates prevalent. [p. 890, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 13th August 1913, modifying that of the Assistant Collector, Farrukhabad District, in the case of enhancement of rent under section 43 of Act II of 1901.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M. (March 20th, 1914).—In this case both parties appeal against certain rents fixed in the Commissioner's decision. The appeal by the zemindar is in regard to petty reductions made by the Commissioner in connection with which it cannot possibly be suggested that any question of law is involved. That appeal is dismissed.

As regards the tenant's appeal, the Commissioner records that the officer who made the original enquiry and the officer to whom the work of enhancement was transferred both visited the village. The first officer made a careful record regarding each of the fields in question, noting those in which there was reason for not applying general rates. Apart from this, the information as to how the rates applied were obtained is practically nil. There is a pencil slip in file showing the rates, but I can find nothing which makes it clear what the exemplar area accepted was or how the rates were worked out. The rent of the appellants was enhanced in Court some 10 years ago and the rates now applied give an enhancement of something close on 50 per cent. in several holdings. That occupancy rents could rise 50 per cent. in 10 years is a proposition which cannot be accepted. It is possible that the former rent was unduly low, but in the circumstances the most definite and clear evidence of the propriety of the rates assumed is necessary. It is not sufficient to hold, as the Commissioner has done, that because the officer trying the case was careful the result must be correct. The tenants are entitled to demand that the enquiry should conclusively show that the rates applied are actually the rates prevailing amongst the occupancy tenants of the neighbourhood. It seems to me impossible to uphold the decision in the present case.

I would cancel the orders of both the lower Courts and direct that the case be restored for hearing and decided by the analysis of the occupancy rental of a sufficient number of neighbouring and similar villages.

Costs will follow the final issue.

TWEEDY, J. M.—I entirely agree with the proposed order. The defects pointed by the Senior Member in his judgments of the Courts are found frequently in enhancement cases and vitiate the whole proceedings. The judgment of the Court of first instance must show clearly the area of the exemplar numbers and how far they correspond with the fields in dispute and must show that the rates devolved really are "prevailing" rates. I consider that the decision of the Assistant Collector is based on no evidence and that there has been no proper trial.

Mr. Villa, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ginnwalla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On 24th September 1912, appellant sold a house and site to one Babu for Rs. 1,500 by registered-deed. On the same or the following day Babu gave appellant a promise in writing to the effect that he agreed to sell to her the same house and ground provided she at any time paid him Rs. 1,500. Babu died on 27th July 1911; his widow Ma Cho sold the property to the respondents. Appellant then sued the respondents for specific performance of Babu's promise to sell the property to her, and obtained a decree that they should convey the property to her within one month in payment of Rs. 1,500. On appeal this decree was reversed and the suit was dismissed on the ground that Babu's agreement was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. Plaintiff now appeals. It is agreed that as a contract for the sale of immoveable property does not create any interest in such property, such contract if in writing is not compulsorily registrable under section 17. Looking, however, at the substance of the matter it appears to me that the effect of the agreement set up would be to create a right of redemption of the property for Rs. 1,500 in favour of the appellant, whether absolutely as the agreement in its terms implies, or for a term of 10 years as appellant alleges was subsequently agreed between them orally. In either case I consider the writing falls within the meaning of section 17 (1) (b) of the Registration Act, and, therefore, requires registration. The case appears to me to be similar to Mutha Venkatachelopati v. Pyanda Venkatachelopati (1) and Suraj Pershad v. Phul Singh (2). On other grounds, moreover, I am of opinion that the suit must fail. Appellant alleges that about two months before the sale to respondents she borrowed Rs. 1,200 and took it to Ma Cho and offered to buy the property. There is no evidence whatever of this fact except appellant's bare word, but even she admits that upon Ma Cho advising her not to purchase with money borrowed at interest, she did not insist, but let the matter rest. Nothing more was done until respondents had bought the property. In my opinion, therefore, it cannot be said that there has ever been an acceptance of Babu's proposal to sell the property to appellant for Rs. 1,500. "An agreement to keep an offer open for a given time does not bind the person making the offer, but it operates as an intimation to the party addressed that no acceptance will be received after the lapse of the time named."* "An offer for instance to sell goods at a price named with a promise to keep it open to a certain day is nudum pactum, and can at any time before acceptance be re-called. Such promise does not prevent the person, who has made the offer, selling the goods meanwhile to a third person, unless by a distinct contract, founded on a distinct consideration, he has engaged not to do so. Thus where defendant offered to plaintiff certain wool for sale with three days' grace to make up his mind, and within three days plaintiff on going to accept the offer was told that the wool was sold to another, it was held there was no contract, because when the plaintiff signified his acceptance, the defendant did not agree."†

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mortgagee—Usufructuary mortgagee—Purchaser by mortgagee of mortgaged property—Merger.

Where a usufructuary mortgagee purchases the property in execution of his own decree on the basis of a simple mortgage, he becomes the absolute owner of the property and the mortgagee right ceases to exist by virtue of the law of merger. [p. 892, col. 1.]

First appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 3rd May 1915.

Mr. G. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this and the connected appeal is the same and arises under the following circumstances. One Jugal Kishore was in possession under a usufructuary mortgage dated November 1868. He had also a simple mortgage on the same property. Jugal Kishore brought a suit on foot of the latter mortgage, obtained a decree and purchased the property himself. Later on the defendants, who held a decree against a judgment-creditor of Jugal Kishore, attached the decree held by that judgment-creditor and in execution thereof applied for the attachment of the property of Jugal Kishore. It is admitted that under these circumstances the defendants were in the same position as if they themselves had a decree against Jugal Kishore. There can be no doubt that if they had attached "the interest of Jugal Kishore in the property" they would have a right to sell all the interest Jugal Kishore had. In other words, they would have been entitled to attach and bring to sale the absolute ownership which had become vested in Jugal Kishore. Instead, however, of attaching his interest they attached merely what they described as the "mortgagee rights" of Jugal Kishore. It was "mortgagee" rights which were put up to sale and according to the sale certificate it was "mortgagee" rights that were purchased by the defendants. The present suit is a suit by the plaintiffs, who are heirs of Jugal Kishore, asking for possession of the property and in the alternative that they should be allowed to redeem the mortgage. The Court of first instance dismissed the case upon a preliminary point. The lower Appellate Court overruling this preliminary ground remanded the case for decision on the merits. The defendants have appealed. It is contended on their behalf that when Jugal Kishore, who was a mortgagee under a usufructuary mortgage, put up the property of his mortgagor to sale and purchased the property, a merger in law took place and Jugal Kishore became the absolute owner and the mortgagee right ceased to exist. This no doubt is quite correct, but it does not help the defendants who are themselves responsible for only having attached and purchased "mortgagee" rights. Under the circumstances we think that the view taken by the Court below on this point was correct and accordingly its order of remand must be affirmed. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Oral evidence, admissibility of.*

In a suit for redemption when the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgage-deed and fails to produce it, oral evidence is admissible under section 65 (a) read with proviso (2) to section 66 of the Evidence Act.

Mr. N. C. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. M. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I am at a loss to understand the District Judge's statement that there is nothing in the plaint about a mortgage-deed. The plaint itself is headed "a suit for recovery of 1.90 acres of land mortgaged by a deed" and the 1st paragraph expressly sets out that such a deed was executed.

The document would naturally be in the possession of the mortgagees, that is, the defendants, and from the nature of the case they must know that they would be required to produce it. Oral evidence was, therefore, admissible under section 65 (a) read with proviso (2) to section 66 of the Evidence Act.

Next, I do not understand the District Judge's reference to a doubt as to the identity of the land. The plaintiffs fully described and attached to their plaint a plan of the 1.90 acres of land they sought to redeem: the defendants alleged that this very land had been bought by them. The identity of the land was never in question.

Again, I do not understand the District Judge's doubt as to defendants having deposed that the witnesses to their deed were all dead. Their agent, Abdul Ali, who conducted the case for them, named them all unequivocally and said they were all dead. Finally as to the defendants having cited other witnesses, it is true that they cited six, whom they did not examine. The record makes it quite clear that they did not tender any of them for examination.

It remains, therefore, to consider the evidence on the record. The plaintiffs have produced two of the witnesses who were present at the mortgage and attested the deed and there appears no ground to disbelieve them. As against this defendants merely produce a deed of which there is not only no proof but which does not even purport to be signed by their alleged vendor. In my opinion the decision of the Township Court was correct. I reverse the decree of the District Court and restore that of the Township Court with costs throughout, Advocate's fees in this Court two gold mohurs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 36—Sir—Ex-proprietary rights—Adverse possession—Sir, character of, if changes.

Ex-proprietary rights can be claimed by any person who may be in possession of the sir, even if that person be a trespasser, specially when the adverse possession has ripened into ownership. Sir retains its character as such in the hands of an adverse owner.

Third appeal from the order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated 13th January 1912, confirming that of the Collector of Allahabad District, in the case of determination of rent under section 36 of Act III of 1901.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this case is very simple and may be briefly disposed of. Appellant has by means of a foreclosure suit become the proprietor of the share to which the land now in question belongs. This share was formerly the property of one Sital Singh who died deeply in debt. His immediate heirs refused to take the inheritance and possession was taken by more distant relatives, who are now the respondents in this case. Sital Singh died 20 years ago. Respondents have since been in proprietary possession. On the foreclosure taking place they claim ex-proprietary rights in the sir. For appellant it is urged that not being the legal heirs of Sital Singh their possession was that of trespassers and the recorded sir cannot, therefore, be considered to be their sir.

I find nothing in the law to support this argument. Land which has acquired the sir character continues to be sir so long as it is so recorded, unless circumstances arise in which ex-proprietary rights may be claimed in it. Ex-proprietary rights may be claimed when land is transferred in execution of a decree or by voluntary alienation. No such transfer has ever taken place in regard to this land and, therefore, the sir in it still continues to be sir. Respondents have had possession, as already remarked, for 20 years. Their proprietary title is, so far as I can see, just as good as if they were Sital Singh's own sons. The position, therefore, is that respondents are the proprietors who were in possession until the foreclosure took place and that the land is sir. They are, therefore, entitled, as found by the Collector and the Commissioner, to ex-proprietary rights in it.

The appeal is dismissed with costs on appellant.

A Court of Small Causes has jurisdiction to go into the question of title arising incidentally in a suit for damages for use and occupation. [p. 894, col. 1.]

A purchaser of immoveable property can sue its occupant for damages for use and occupation, if the occupant had occupied the premises with the consent of the previous owner but had been served with a notice that he would no longer be allowed to occupy it free of rent. A presumption to pay rent arises from occupation. [p. 894, col. 1.]

Mr. Halkar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ba Shio, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the defendants in revision from the judgment of the Small Cause Court passed against them for damages for use and occupation of a certain house. The plaintiffs bought the house from the previous owner by a registered transfer. The previous owner, according to the defendants, allowed them to occupy it free of rent in lieu of interest, which was payable on a loan owing by the previous owner to them. The defendants have no legal charge on the property. The plaintiffs served a notice on the defendants requesting them to vacate the premises and giving them notice that, if they did not do so, they would be charged Rs. 20 a month. The defendants knew that the plaintiffs were the owners of the property.

It is contended that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to go into the question of the plaintiffs' title. The Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for damages for use and occupation and the question of title arises in this suit incidentally; therefore, it must be determined by the Small Cause Court in order that the Small Cause Court should determine the suit. It is urged that section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act applies and creates a charge on the property in favour of the defendants as against the plaintiffs, i.e., it makes a transaction which is not recognised by law, valid, which, of course, is absurd. The section does not apply. It is contended upon the authority of Ramrick Dass v. Mohamed Yacubji Dudah (1) that there being no express agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendants, i.e., no privity of contract, the plaintiffs' only remedy was to sue their vendor for possession and mesne profits. In that case, it was held that the defendant did not occupy by the permission or sufferance of the plaintiff. A presumption, however, of a contract to pay a reasonable sum arises from the defendants' occupation of the plaintiffs' property. The previous owner, by giving notice to the defendants that he would no longer allow them to occupy it free of rent, would have been entitled to sue for damages for use and occupation, and the plaintiffs having acquired the previous owner's title, they have that right. (See Foa on Landlord and Tenant at page 399 and the cases there cited.) No ground, therefore, is made out for this application which is dismissed with costs, two gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—The decision of this appeal admittedly turns on a point of law, and there is no contest as to the facts. Moreover, it has been agreed before us that the dispute should be decided by us notwithstanding any defects in procedure.

The question is whether the title of a purchaser from one who has bought at a sale in execution of his own decree is liable to be defeated where the decree has been subsequently set aside.

It was decided in Sheik Ismal Rowther v. Rajab Rowther (1) that where property sold in execution of a voidable decree is purchased by the decree-holder and by him sold for value to a third person, who has no notice of any defect in the decree,

(1) 30 M. 295; 17 M. L. J. 165; 2 M. L. T. 86.

SATIS CHANDRA GHOSH V. RAMESWARI DAS.

the equitable right to set aside such a decree cannot prevail against the rights of a subsequent purchaser for value without notice. If this decision be correct, then the present appeal must succeed.

But I find it difficult to reconcile this decision with what was said by the Privy Council in Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (2). There sales were attacked which were effected under decrees that were subsequently set aside. Of the purchasers some had bought in execution of a decree to which they were strangers. Some were decree-holders who had purchased at a sale in execution of their own decree, and some were subsequently purchasers from such decree-holders. Those in the 3rd of these categories were in precisely the same position as the appellant in this case.

In delivering the opinion of the Privy Council Sir Barnes Peacock said: "Some of the defendants were decree-holders and some were persons who came in under them; but all the defendants who are in that position may for the purpose of this judgment be classed under the head of the decree-holders. Others of the defendants were not decree-holders, but merely purchasers under the execution and strangers to the decree upon which the execution issued." This passage is important and the rest of the opinion must be read in the light of the extended meaning it gives to the word "decree-holders." And when it is said that "a great distinction has been made between the case of bona fide purchasers who are no parties to a decree at a sale under execution and the decree-holders themselves," it has to be remembered who are included in the term decree-holders. It is on the strength of this distinction between those who are and those who are not decree-holders that the decision went in favour of the latter.

This appears to me to be the result of the language employed by their Lordships, and I am unable to accede to the argument that the result is so opposed to legal principles that we ought not to give complete effect to the language used.

The Court as a matter of policy has a tender regard for honest purchasers at sales held in execution of its decrees though the sales may be subsequently set aside, where those purchasers are not parties to the suit and the decree has not been passed without jurisdiction.

But the same measure of protection is not extended to purchasers who are themselves the decree-holders; nor can the purchasers from such decree-holders claim that the Court owes them any duty, or to be within the policy which prompts the extension of protection to strangers. They have bought from one whose title is liable to be defeated and if the decision in Zain-ul-Abdin Khan's case (2) bears the meaning I have attributed to it, the title acquired by the purchaser from the decree-holder is similarly defeasible. And the defeasibility of a decree-holder's title where the decree is ex parte is of such common occurrence that the plea of a purchaser for value without notice hardly applies.

The appeal, which has been limited to this bare point of law, therefore, fails, as does the cross-objection, and the result is that we decline at this stage to interfere with the decree of the Subordinate Judge. But before we can finally dispose of the case, it is necessary that it should be determined whether the sale should be set aside as against the appellants, for it is their case that the decree and the sale to the decree-holder were not set aside in their presence. The parties agree that this should be determined on an issue in the suit.

"Ought the ex parte decree and the sale to the decree-holder to be set aside to the prejudice of the appellants?"

The parties will be at liberty to adduce evidence on this and it will be open to the respondents to show that the appellants are bound by the orders that have been made. The return should be made in two months.

Issue sent down.

31—Judgment, contents of—Appellate Court, duty of.

An Appellate Court should not dispose of appeals coming before it in a judgment which does not show the points raised and the reason for its decision.

Saravana Pillai v. Sessa Reddi, 31 M. 469; 18 M. L. J. 34; 3 M. L. T. 71; Assanullah v. Hafiz Mahomed Ali, 10 C. 932 at p. 935, referred to.

Mr. J. E. Lambert, for the Appellants.

Mr. May Oung, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the District Court of Kyaukpyn confirming the judgment and decree of the Township Court of Ramree.

The only ground of appeal is that the judgments of the lower Courts are unintelligible and not according to law. That the judgments are open to this criticism, Mr. May Oung, Counsel for the respondents, admitted at the hearing. He even suggested that both the judgments should be set aside and the lower Courts called upon to write proper judgments. I agree that they are not in accordance with law. But I do not think it necessary to set aside the judgment of the Township Court and order it to write a proper judgment. The lower Appellate Court being a Court of fact may deal with the case as it appears on the record. With regard to the judgment of the lower Appellate Court the proper course is to set aside its judgment and decree and remand the case to it to be disposed of according to law. See Saravana Pillai v. Sessa Reddi (1).

Order XLI, rule 31, provides that the judgment of the Appellate Court shall state (a) the points for determination, (b) the decision thereon, (c) the reasons for the decision and (d) when the decree appealed from is reversed or varied, the relief to which the appellant is entitled. These requirements are provided for in order, as stated in Assanullah v. Hafiz Mahomed Ali (2), to afford the litigant parties an opportunity of knowing and understanding the grounds upon which the decision proceeded with a view to enable them to exercise, if they see fit and are so advised, the right of second appeal conferred by section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. An Appellate Court should not, therefore, dispose of appeals coming before it in a judgment which does not show the points raised and the reasons for its decision, for the effect of such a non-compliance with the law might be that the right of second appeal was altogether neutralized.

The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and the case is remanded to it for disposal according to law. In dealing with the case, that Court will adopt the procedure laid down at page 471 of the judgment in Madras case cited above.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this appeal to consider whether a sale of the properties of the appellant in execution of an ex parte mortgage-decree, should stand confirmed. The sale was held on the 2nd November 1911 and was confirmed on the 13th December following. The decree-holder, who had himself become the purchaser, forthwith transferred the property to another person. On the 19th August 1912, the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside; he alleged that the sale had been irregularly and fraudulently held and had caused him substantial injury. He joined as opposite parties to his application, both the decree-holder auction-purchaser and the assignee from him. At the same time, he instituted proceedings to have the ex parte decree itself set aside. On the 22nd February 1913, the application to set aside the ex parte decree was granted. Thus, on the 28th July 1913, when the Munsif took up for disposal, the application to set aside the sale, he found that the ex parte decree had already been set aside. He consequently held that the sale must be set aside on the authority of the decision in Set Umedmal v. Srinath Ray (1), although in the interval, the decree-holder auction-purchaser had transferred the property to a stranger. In this view, he declined to take evidence as regards the merits of the case and set aside the sale without enquiry into the allegations of fraud, irregularity and substantial injury. On appeal by the assignee from the decree-holder auction-purchaser, the District Judge has reversed this order and has directed that the sale do stand good. He has held that the assignee from the decree-holder stands on a better footing than his assignor and is entitled to retain the property, notwithstanding the cancellation of the ex parte decree which was the foundation for the sale. The judgment-debtor has now appealed to this Court and has invited us to hold that the sale stood cancelled as soon as the ex parte decree was set aside and that it was immaterial that the property had meanwhile been assigned away by the decree-holder auction-purchaser. We are of opinion that this contention is well-founded and must prevail. In the first place, it is clear that the primary Court was competent to set aside the sale on a ground which was not mentioned in the application of the judgment-debtor and did not in fact exist when that application was made. It is well settled that the Court may, in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties, take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the proceedings and may afford relief to the parties on the basis of the altered conditions. The decisions which recognise this principle, are reviewed in Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswanath Mandal (2) and reference may be made particularly to Hazari Mal v. Janaki Prasad (3) and Ramyad Sahu v. Bindeswari Kumar Upadhyay (4).

In the second place, it is clear that the effect of the cancellation of the ex parte decree on the execution sale held thereunder is not touched by the fact that the decree-holder auction-purchaser has assigned away the property sold. As fully explained by Jenkins, C. J., in Satis Chandra Ghose v. Rameswari Dasi (5), the assignee stands in no better position than his assignor. This is borne out by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (6), and it is plain that the contrary view adopted in Sheik Ismail Rowther v. Rajab Rowther (7), is supported neither by principle nor by authority. The theory whereby a special protection is afforded to a stranger who purchases at an execution sale, will be found expounded in the case of Krishna Chandra Maudal v. Jogendra Narain Roy (8); that rule cannot be extended to an assignee of the decree-holder auction-purchaser.

We are informed that on re-trial of the suit a decree has been made in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant; but as Maclean, C. J., pointed out in Set Umedmal v. Srinath Ray (1) that does not affect the question of the effect of the cancellation of the ex parte decree upon the sale held thereunder; as soon as the ex parte decree was set aside, the sale fell through, and the fresh decree subsequently made, could not possibly validate that sale. On this ground, the present case is distinguishable from the decisions in Hazari Mal v. Janaki Prasad (3) and Ramyaal Sahu v. Bindeswari Kumar Upadhyay (4), where the very decree which was the basis of the sale, though temporarily nullified, was ultimately maintained.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. Each party will pay his own costs throughout the proceedings.

RESPONDENT.Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 158—“Muafi khairati”, meaning of—Resumption—Revenue, assessment of.

An entry with respect to a grant in the Agra Province to the effect that the land is “Muafi khairati”, means that the grant is an absolute one for charitable purposes and is not resumable, and entries to the contrary in subsequent village administration papers, cannot affect the circumstances under which the grant was made. [p. 899, col. 1.]

Where such land has been held for 50 years and upwards by two successors to the original grantee, it should be assessed to revenue only. [p. 899, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 20th January 1913, confirming that of the Settlement Officer, Etawah, in a case of resumption of land.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(August 14th 1913.)—This suit for resumption of land held rent free was heard by the Settlement Officer of Etawah. The land in question has without doubt been held rent free for more than 50 years and by more than two successors to the original grantee. The first record on the subject, is in the wajib-ul-arz of 1883 when the tenure was recorded as a charitable grant and the wajib-ul-arz contained a declaration by the zemindar that he would not resume within the period of Settlement. The provision in the wajib-ul-arz of 1872 was that when the zemindar desired to resume, he would apply to the Collector for assessment of rent. The Settlement Officer held that these facts indicated a grant resumable at the pleasure of the grantor. He, therefore, dispossessed the grantee under section 154 of the Tenancy Act. The questions raised in this case, are of general importance, inasmuch as the conclusions arrived at form precedents in regard to the action to be taken in regard to other charitable muafis in the Etawah District. I am unable to agree with the view taken by the Settlement Officer and accepted by the Commissioner. It is clear that under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 the grant is not resumable at the pleasure of the grantor, nor can I consider that this wajib-ul-arz is evidence that it was a grant for a term. The declaration in the wajib-ul-arz was not made when the grant was given but was simply a statement of the view, the zemindar took in regard to his liability under a pre-existing grant. The grant had been made before and there is nothing to show that it was made for the period of Settlement or for any other period. The zemindar simply acknowledged that he would consider it binding for the period of Settlement. According to this wajib-ul-arz, the grant was not one which is resumable under section 154. The provision in the 1872 wajib-ul-arz in regard to the same tenure, deserves no consideration, because it is simply the statement of an interested party and inconsistent with the declaration of his predecessor-in-interest. I do not think that it can in any way be held that this is shown to be a resumable grant. I hold, therefore, that it was a grant to which section 158 applies. I consider that in the general importance of this ruling and in the confiscation of existing rights which the Settlement Officer's decision implies, there is ground for a revision.

I would allow this application and call for a report from the Settlement Officer as to the revenue payable in regard to this rent-free grant.

TWERDY, J. M.—I agree with the Senior Member's view. The entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 is to the effect that the land is "Muafi Khairati". Throughout the Agra Province in my experience such an entry means that the grant is an absolute one for charitable purposes and is not resumable and entries in subsequent village administration papers cannot effect the circumstances under which the grant was made. The evidence is strong that it has been held for 50 years and upwards by two successors to the original grantee and I concur in the view that it should be assessed to revenue only.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sec. 11, cl. 17, 20—Arbitration—Question of title referred to arbitration—Award—Trial de novo—Proceedings before Civil Court—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 14, Sch. I Art. 178.

After the death of a certain Hindu, disputes arose among the various branches of his family as to their title. One branch alleged separation and the other branch alleged that the family was still joint. It appeared that the family was possessed of shares in a number of villages in two Tahsils, some of the villages standing in the names of some of the members and others in the names of other members. An application for mutation of names was made in regard to each village. In the case of one Tahsil application for mutation was made to the Tahsildar while in the case of the other to the Assistant Collector. The parties subsequent to the institution of proceedings executed agreements to refer their disputes as to the title to the land, to arbitration. These agreements were placed before the respective officers and all files were sent to the arbitrator. The arbitrator filed an award. At a subsequent stage of the case, he was directed to file another award which he did in exactly the same terms and bearing a later date. The respondents were not satisfied with the award and the matter went up to the Board of Revenue, which sent the cases back to be tried de novo without regard to arbitration. Upon this, the appellants filed applications under clauses 17 and 20 of Schedule II, Code of Civil Procedure.

Held, (1) that clause 17 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, could not operate in the circumstances of the present case as the facts had gone beyond the stage contemplated by that clause; [p. 901, col. 2.]

(2) that the application under clause 20, of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, was barred under Article 178, Schedule I, Limitation Act, as it was made more than a year after the date of the award and as it was impossible either under section 5 or section 14 of the Limitation Act to extend the time so as to enable the present application to be treated as made within time. RAM UGRAH PANDE v. ACHRAJ NATH PANDE.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal arising out of an application made in the Court below, which was primarily based on clause 17 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure. While the matter was pending, an application for amendment was made and an alternative relief was asked for under clause 20 of the same Schedule. The lower Court has refused both the reliefs. The first relief which was claimed under clause 17, it rejected on the ground that an award had been made by the arbitrator on the basis of the agreement between the parties and that clause 17 could not apply, the matter having attained a stage beyond that contemplated by that clause. With regard to the relief claimed under clause 20, it rejected it on the ground that the application was barred by time under Article 178 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act. The applicants have come here on appeal. The parties are the descendants of one Prag Pande. The latter had five sons, one of whom died childless. All the others have now died. Sheomangal has left three sons who are parties to the present dispute. Hansraj has left five sons and a widow who are also parties to the present dispute. Kedar Nath left a widow Musammât Sonkali and three daughters, of these the former alone is a party to the dispute. Gokul Nath has left a widow Musammât Dirka and three daughters and the former only is a party to this dispute. It appears that the family was possessed of shares in a number of villages lying in the two Tahsils of Basti and Khalilabad in the Basti District. Some of the villages stood in the names of some of the members, and others stood in the names of other members. After the death of Kedar Nath, a dispute arose amongst the various branches as to their title. One branch alleged separation, the other branch alleged that the family still remained joint. An application for mutation of names was made in regard to each village. In the case of the Basti villages, the applications were made in the regular way to the Tahsildar Assistant Collector. In the case of the Khalilabad villages, the applications appear to have been made in the Court of the Assistant Collector who was in charge of the pargana.

In the Basti cases, the 18th of November 1912 was fixed by the Tahsildar. In the Khalilabad cases, the 2nd of December was fixed by the Pargana Officer. On the 18th of November, the parties executed an agreement to refer their dispute as to the title to the land to the arbitration of one Rameswar Dat Man Tewari. This agreement clearly sets out that the parties have a dispute as to their title to the family property, that they refer the dispute to the arbitrator, that they will abide by his decision, that they will take possession of their various shares according to his decision and that they will cause mutation of names to be made according thereto. Apparently the agreement was put before the Tahsildar and was filed on the record of the case before him. He adjourned the mutation case clearly with a view to enable the parties to settle their dispute by means of arbitration. He fixed a date directing them to settle that dispute, but also laying down that if the disputes were not settled by the date so fixed, then they were to be prepared to produce evidence in connection with the mutation case. On the 2nd of December 1912, the date fixed by the Pargana Officer, in the case before him, a similar agreement written exactly in the same language and bearing date the 2nd of December 1912 was filed before the Pargana Officer of Khalilabad. Under orders of the Collector the, Pargana Officer of Khalilabad was directed to decide both sets of cases, namely, the Basti and the Khalilabad cases. The Pargana Officer of Khalilabad sent all his files to the Tahsildar of Basti and told him to send the agreement to arbitrate to the arbitrator. This clearly was done, for on the 13th of February 1913 the arbitrator filed an award bearing date the 8th of February 1913. It appears that at a subsequent stage of the case, he was directed to write out another award and that he did draw up an award worded exactly in the same language as the first one simply bearing a different date. One of the parties, the respondents to the present appeal, apparently was not pleased with the decision of the arbitrator. The mutation cases were fought up to the Board of Revenue which finally sent back the records of the mutation cases with directions to try them de novo without any reference whatsoever to the arbitration proceedings. The present appellants then filed the present application (out of which this appeal has arisen) in the Civil Court. Primarily as we have noted, it was an application under clause 17 of the Schedule asking that the agreement to arbitrate, of the 18th November 1912, should be filed in Court. Subsequently an alternative relief was prayed by the subsequent amendment asking that the award dated 8th February 1913 be filed in Court and that a decree be passed based on the same. We have heard considerable argument as to whether or not the Tahsildar of Basti or the Pargana Officer of Khalilabad had or had not power to refer the matter to the arbitrator. We have not been shown any written application by the parties to either of those officers asking them to make the reference to the arbitrator. It is quite clear that the agreement of the 18th of November 1912, was an agreement made entirely out of Court. It is an agreement to refer to the arbitrator, the disputed question of title, i. e., a question which the Revenue Court was not competent to decide in the cases then pending before it. It was not an agreement to refer the mutation case or cases to an arbitrator. It is an agreement on which the arbitrator, if the parties had referred the matter at once to him directly, would have been empowered to take the evidence of the parties and to make an award. It seems to us immaterial whether or not the Tahsildar or the Pargana Officer had or had not legal power as a Revenue Court to refer the agreement to the arbitrator. It is quite clear that the Tahsildar forwarded it to the latter with the full consent of the parties. If, therefore, there was any illegal reference under the Revenue Act it does not concern this present case. An agreement to arbitrate and a valid agreement was made out of Court and by the wish of the parties, it was sent on to the arbitrator by the Tahsildar, as indeed it might have been forwarded through any private person. It is an admitted fact that the arbitrator made an award. It is, therefore, quite clear that clause 17 of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code cannot operate in the circumstances of the present case. The facts have gone beyond the stage contemplated by the clause. In regard to clause 20 of the Schedule, in so far as the application is based thereon, the question is whether or not the application is barred by time. Admittedly Article 178 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act applies and that lays down a period of six months from the date of the award. The present application was made more than a year after the date of the award. Prima facie it is, therefore, barred by limitation. A certain amount of stress has been laid on sections 5 and 14 of the Limitation Act. Section 5 clearly cannot apply. If the present proceedings be deemed to be based on an application and not to be a "suit," section 5 does not apply as that only relates to an appeal or an application for review of judgment or for leave to appeal or any other application to which this section may be made applicable by any enactment or rule for the time being in force. No enactment or rule can be shown which would make this section applicable to an application of the present description. On the other hand if the present matter be deemed to be a suit within the meaning of section 14, it is equally clear that the present appellants are not entitled to exclude the time during which they were prosecuting the mutation cases in the Revenue Court. The present application is an application to have an award filed and a decree passed on the basis of that award. The matter in controversy in the Revenue Court was not of this description. It was merely a mutation matter with a totally different cause of action as its basis. The present application is based upon the fact that there was an agreement to arbitrate and an award made upon that agreement. The two proceedings cannot be said to be founded on the same cause of action.

There remains the question which we need not decide, as to whether the proceeding in the Revenue Court was a suit within the meaning of section 14, although on that point there is a ruling in Muhammad Subhanullah v. Secretary of State for India (1) which is against the present appellants. It is, therefore, impossible for us either under section 5 or section 14 of the Limitation Act to extend the time so as to enable the present application to be treated as made within time. We note that the respondents plead before us in argument that both the agreement and the award were prima facie legal and binding subject to any objection which could be raised on the ground of fraud or misconduct of the arbitrator etc. The Court below has found that both the agreement and the award were valid and that the present application was barred by time. With this we find ourselves in agreement. The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

When a case is settled by compromise, the decision is as binding as if it had been decided after hearing evidence and it is not permissible to go behind that decision and enquire whether the decision might have been different if evidence had been adduced.

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 30th April 1913, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Allahabad District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment of the Assistant Collector deals adequately and satisfactorily with this case. There was in the order of Munshi Abdur Rashid Khan, a judicial decision binding on parties that the land in question was held at a rent of Rs. 32 with ex-proprietary rights. When a case is settled by compromise, the decision is as binding as if it had been decided after hearing evidence and it is not permissible to go behind that decision and enquire whether the decision might have been different if evidence had been adduced. There is no ground for revision. The application is dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3—Petition filed in mutation case as to adjustment of dispute—Registration, if necessary—Evidence—Petition, admissibility of—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17.

A petition filed in a mutation case in which the parties merely request the Revenue Court to effect mutation of names in accordance with an agreement come to between the parties out of Court, is not compulsorily registrable and is admissible in evidence in a subsequent civil suit to prove the adjustment of a dispute between the parties out of Court. [p. 903, col. 2; p. 904, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala (with him Mr. Benode Behari), for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju (with him Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which one Lala Lal Bahadur claimed a declaration of his title to certain property which originally belonged to three brothers, Raja Lal, Ambika Prasad and Munna Lal. The plaintiff's claim was that he was the daughter's son of one Bhawani Sahai, the paternal grandfather of the three persons we have named. It appears that while this suit was pending, there were also pending in the Revenue Court proceedings for mutation of names. The application for mutation and the opposition thereto, were based on exactly the same considerations as in the civil suit. On the 23rd of October 1913, a petition was presented in the revenue matter signed by Lal Bahadur (plaintiff) and Sital Prasad (the contending defendant). This petition set forth that the revenue matter had been compromised in the manner set forth in the petition. The petition goes on to say that Lal Bahadur and Govind Prasad had agreed to recognise that Sital Prasad had a right to three-fourths of the property in dispute as sapinda to Raja Lal and Munna Lal. The Revenue Court acted on the petition and made entries accordingly. On the 21st of November 1913, the plaintiff presented a petition to the learned Judge before whom the present suit was pending, stating that the suit had been compromised and asking that a decree should be made under Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He brought on to the file, the petition of the 23rd of October 1913, to which we have referred above. The defendant did not deny that he had joined in the petition, but said that he had done so as the result of fraud and undue influence. The Court below held that there was no fraud or undue influence and made a decree in the terms of the alleged adjustment.

In the present appeal, it is urged that the petition not being registered, was inadmissible having regard to the provision of section 17 of the Registration Act, XVI of 1908. The respondent contends that the petition to the Revenue Court was not a document that required registration and that it was admissible to prove that an adjustment of the civil suit had been made by the parties out of Court and that in the absence of fraud, it demonstrated that there had been an adjustment. From time to time, the admissibility of such petitions as evidence in subsequent proceedings in the Civil Courts, has been raised and there is undoubtedly some conflict of authority. Section 17 of the Registration Act (clause b) provides that "non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any right, title or interest of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards to or in immoveable property" must be registered. It has been argued that these petitions are instruments requiring registration within the meaning of the section. In most, if not in all, of the cases heretofore decided in which the question has arisen, the petition was presented to the Revenue Court long before the Civil Court proceedings were instituted. It may perhaps fairly be said that in some of these cases, the party producing the petition of compromise, was attempting to use it for the purpose of showing that some right in immoveable property had either been "created, declared, assigned, limited or extinguished". If in the present case, the respondent was seeking to use the petition to show that a right in immoveable property had been "created, declared, assigned, limited or extinguished," it might have been urged with great force that if the document "purported or operated" to do any one or more of these things, it was inadmissible for want of registration and that if it did not so "purport or operate" it was inadmissible as irrelevant. In the present case we think that the petition of the 23rd of October 1913, was produced in the Court below merely for the purpose of showing that this very suit had been adjusted by the parties out of Court. This is clearly shown by the petition which the plaintiff filed in the Civil Court setting forth that there had been an adjustment. The petition of the 23rd of October, does not on the face of it purport to "create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any right." It was merely a request to the Revenue Court to effect mutation of names in accordance with an agreement come to between the parties. The petition does not on the face of it even purport to be the agreement between the parties. It is simply a "petition" addressed to the Court. Order XXIII, rule 3, provides that where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, the Court shall order such compromise to be recorded and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit. Prior to the passing of the present Code, it had been the practice of this Court not to act under the corresponding section 375 of the old Code, unless the parties were actually agreed that an adjustment had been made when the Court was asked to act. The other High Courts on the contrary had taken the view that it was open to one of the parties to prove the adjustment even when the other party denied it. The words of the present Order seem to indicate that the Legislature has thought well to adopt the practice prevailing in the other Courts and that the Court must now enquire whether or not there has been an adjustment out of Court. There was nothing to prevent the parties to the present suit coming to an oral agreement of adjustment. The only transactions relating to immoveable property which require to be made in writing are those specified in the Transfer of Property Act. If the parties had presented to the Civil Court a petition in the same terms as that presented to the Revenue Court, the Civil Court would undoubtedly have received it and acted upon it. We do not think that any one could have contended that such a petition required registration. Suppose that both parties had signed such a petition and that on the strength of it the respondent had asked the Court to act under Order XXIII, rule 3, suppose further that the applicant had opposed the Court so acting on the ground that he had been induced to sign the petition by fraud and that the Court had found that there was no fraud, we think it clear that the Court would have been bound to make a decree in terms of the adjustment and that the applicant could not have successfully contended that the signed petition was inadmissible for want of registration. We think that the petition (which both parties signed) to the Revenue Court was in the circumstances of the case admissible as evidence that the present suit had been adjusted out of Court. The significance to be attached to the evidence is of course another matter. In the present case when we consider that the mutation proceedings and the Civil Court suit were going on simultaneously and that it was exactly the same dispute, it is clear that the present suit was adjusted. It is quite clear that the petition in the revenue matter was made in pursuance of the agreement to adjust the dispute pending between the parties. In the natural course of events if Sital Prasad had kept good faith, he would have joined in a petition to the Civil Judge couched in exactly the same terms as the petition he had joined in, to the Revenue Court. We think that the Court below was justified in coming to the conclusion that the parties had adjusted the suit out of Court, and that being so, it was the duty of the learned Judge to make the decree in terms of that adjustment. We see no reason to differ from the view taken by the Court below on the question of undue influence and fraud, nor was it seriously urged that we should do so. We dismiss the appeal with costs including in this, Court fees on the higher scale. The decree will not issue until the deficiency is made good by the plaintiff-respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

Petition, under Order XLVII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, for review of the judgment passed by the Hon'ble Sir Alfred Kensington, Kt., Chief Judge, on the 16th April 1915, in the civil revision case noted above.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondent.

ORDER. In this case I am asked to review the judgment of the late Chief Judge dated the 16th April 1915, in which he allowed three revision petitions against the order of Mr. Barker, District Judge, Amritsar, dated 28th January 1913. My learned predecessor noted that it was unusual to interfere with an interlocutory order on the revision side and gave reasons for doing so in this instance. The reason why I have admitted this review is that it appears fairly clear that, when the learned Judge heard the case on the 1st November 1913, he did not hear any of the arguments of the respondents' Pleader, Mr. Tek Chand, but intended to fix the case for some early Saturday and then to hear the arguments. No date was fixed and about a year and a half afterwards, on 16th April 1915, the learned Judge, without hearing anything further, disposed of the case and allowed the revisions. It seemed to me necessary in the interests of justice that the case should be re-heard and the arguments properly presented. I have now heard the revisions argued on the merits by both sides.

GURDITTA MAL V. DHARI MAL.

The questions in the case are, first, should this Court interfere on the revision side at all? Second, if so, is the finding and decision of Mr. Barker actually correct or incorrect? As to the former question, I do not think it would be right for me to run counter to my predecessor. The Divisional Judge's action is a matter of discretion, and my predecessor gave reasons for thinking that he should interfere, if the order of the lower Court was incorrect. I, therefore, pass by the first question. With regard to the second question, Mr. Barker's judgment is not very easy to interpret. He holds quite plainly that, at the time of Hari Mal's death, he and Dhari Mal are not proved to have constituted a joint Hindu family. From this finding, he deduces the consequence that a succession certificate must be produced by Dhari Mal before the suit can be proceeded with. This is in the last paragraph of his judgment. In the last paragraph but one, he mentions the documentary evidence of the plaintiff which he considers relevant and says that that evidence is insufficient to prove the existence of a joint undivided Hindu family, inasmuch as not one of these pieces of evidence shows "anything more than that" Hari Mal and Dhari Mal were joint proprietors of a firm dealing in hundis. He does not say whether it is his reasoned opinion that the sole surviving partner of a firm requires a succession certificate before he can bring a suit to recover a debt due to the firm, but this would appear to have been the impression in his mind. There can be no doubt that, where one member of a joint undivided Hindu family dies, the other members succeed to him by survivorship and do not require any succession certificate in order to sue for debts due to the family. Whether the same rule applies to the survivors of a partnership is not perhaps so clear. A partner having died, the surviving partner does not succeed to the dead partner by survivorship, and so the case is quite different from that of a joint undivided Hindu family. On the contrary, if the dead partner has got sons, the surviving partner does not succeed to any part of the dead man's estate; and if the dead partner has no heirs nearer than the surviving partner, then the surviving partner succeeds by inheritance. Section 4 (a) of the Succession Certificate Act says: "No Court shall pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person or any part thereof except on the production by the person so claiming of a certificate granted under this Act." Section 45 of the Contract Act indicates that, when one of two joint promisees dies, their rights are thereafter enjoyed by the surviving promisee and the representative of the deceased promisee. On the other hand, under section 263 of the Contract Act, after dissolution of partnership, the rights and obligations of the partners continue in all things necessary for winding up the business of the partnership; and of course by law, a partnership is at once dissolved on the death of a partner. It is argued on the strength of this section that Dhari Mal, having been found by Mr. Barker to have been a partner with Hari Mal, has, subject to all equities, at all events a right to sue for debts due to the partnership, that being a necessary part of the business of winding up a partnership.

Now, if Dhari Mal in this case was suing simply as the surviving partner and was not denying to the other members of the family their right as heirs of the deceased Hari Mal, I would be inclined to say that no succession certificate was required because of the wording of section 4 (a) of the Succession Certificate Act, especially the words "claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person." If Dhari Mal was suing in that way he would not be claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person as due to himself alone. But here we find that the matter is highly controversial and that Dhari Mal's case is that the other brothers have no right in Hari Mal's estate whatever, and therefore it is clear that he is suing on the ground of being, along with Hari Mal, a member of a joint undivided Hindu family. In my opinion, therefore, on the finding of Mr. Barker, a succession certificate was required. I think if my learned predecessor had heard the arguments of both sides, he probably would have come to this conclusion himself.

For these reasons, I allow the review and dismiss the revision petition with costs throughout.

Review allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12, Sch. I, Art. 179—Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty—Limitation from what date to be computed—Time requisite for obtaining copy of decree, if excluded.

In computing the period of six months under Article 179 of the Limitation Act provided for an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, an applicant is entitled under section 12, clause (2), of the Limitation Act, to exclude the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree.

Section 12 (2) of the Limitation Act is general and applies to all applications for leave to appeal.

Messrs. Gulzarilal and Kai'as Nath Katin, for the Appellants.

Mr. Benode Behari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. A point has been taken on behalf of the respondent that the application was not presented within time. Article 179 of the Limitation Act prescribes a period of limitation of six months from the date of the decree. Section 12, clause (2), of the Limitation Act (now in force) provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for an application "for leave to appeal", the day on which the judgment complained of, was pronounced and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree shall be excluded. It is admitted that if this provision applies to an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the application is within time. Prior to the passing of the present Limitation Act, appeals to His Majesty had to be brought within six months from the date of the decree and the applicant was not at liberty to exclude any time for the purpose of obtaining a copy of the decree. Under the old Act, this time was only allowed to applications for leave to appeal as a pauper; but the clause of the section as it now stands is general and appears to apply to all applications for leave to appeal. It is highly probable that the words "leave to appeal as a pauper" were omitted so as to include applications for leave to appeal in insolvency matters. But in construing the section, we must deal with the section as it now stands. On the plain words of the section, an applicant for leave to appeal is entitled to exclude the period referred to. In our opinion, the application is within time.

The value of the subject-matter of the suit in the Court below and of the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council is upwards of Rs. 10,000. This Court did not affirm the decision of the Court of first instance. The case accordingly fulfils the requirements of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure and we so certify. We make no order as to costs.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 6th December 1912, reversing that of the Assistant Collector of Allahabad District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The land in question was recorded as sir at the last Settlement and has been continuously so recorded since. The Court of first instance held that it ceased to be sir when it was transferred by gift to a person not a co-sharer in the mahal. The Commissioner holds that this view is incorrect, that a transfer by gift does not deprive the land of its character of sir even though it is in favour of a person not a co-sharer.

There can be no doubt that the Commissioner's view is correct, that the transfer by gift has not the effect of creating exproprietary rights and so depriving the land of its character of sir.

Hindu Law—Partition—Step-mother, share of—Mitakshara.

According to the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law a step-mother is entitled to a share equal to that of a son upon partition.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Agra, dated the 24th June 1913.

Mr. Benode Behari, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sham Krishna Dar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is connected with First Appeal No. 355 of 1914. It is a suit for partition brought by Bishambhar Nath and Musammatt Chirauji against Har Narain and his son Amba Prasad. Bisham-bhar Nath is the brother of Har Narain. Musammatt Chirauji is the mother of Bishambhar Nath and step-mother of Har Narain. The only point which arises in the appeal, is the share to which Musammatt Chirauji is entitled upon partition. The defendants contend that she is only entitled to a share out of the share allotted on partition to her son. On the other hand, the plaintiffs contend that the property must be divided into three parts, one part should be allotted to Bishambhar Nath, one part to Musammatt Chirauji and a third part to Har Narain. The Court below has acceded to the contention of the plaintiffs. The defendants have appealed. Reliance was placed on the case of Hemangini Dasi v. Kedar Nath Kunda Chowdhury (1). This no doubt would be an authority in the appellants' favour if the present was a case governed by the Benares School of Law (i. e. Mitakshara), but it is quite clear that the case cited was one under the Bengal School of Law, namely, the Dayabhaga. This appears from the judgment in the case of Chowdhury Thakur Prasad Shahi v. Musammatt Bhagwati Koor (2). On the other hand, there are several authorities in favour of the plaintiff which refer to the Mitakshara School of Law [See Damodar Misser v. Semabatty Misra (3), Damodar Das Maekhal v. Uttamram Maekhal (4)]. The same point was expressly decided by this Court in the case of Mathura Prasad v. Deoka (5). In our opinion, the view taken by the Court below was correct and should be affirmed. We dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court-fees on the higher scale.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Chingleput, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition
No. 681 of 1914 in Original Suit No. 5 of 1911.

FACTS.—The Advocate-General, Madras, instituted a suit for settling a scheme for the management of the Temple at Sriperum-badoor, Chingleput District, and Rao Sahib T. Namberumal Chettiar, a contractor in Madras, was appointed Receiver pending the disposal of the suit. Meanwhile the 1st defendant (the jeer of the mutt) died. His widows adopted a minor boy and he was brought on record as the legal representative of the deceased defendant and Mr. T.
Namberumal Chettiar was appointed his guardian. In November 1914, a petition was put in to remove Mr. T. Namberumal Chettiar from the Receivership on the ground that he was appointed the guardian of the minor and as such was interested in one of the parties, and could not, therefore, act as a Receiver. The District Judge ordered his removal and the present revision petition is against that order.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Petitioners for the guardian, contended that the fact of his being appointed a guardian could not disentitle him to be Receiver also of the properties.

Messrs. P. R. Ganapathy Aiyar and S.
Sundararaja Aiyangar, for the Respondents, pointed out that under section 16 of the General Clauses Act, a Court could remove a guardian appointed.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Mr. Namberu-mal Chetty, the counter-petitioner, was appointed Receiver on the 19th of November 1913. On the 14th December, the widows against whom the suit was continued as the legal representatives of their deceased husband adopted a boy. The Receiver was appointed guardian of the minor boy by the widows. Thereupon this application was made to the District Court to cancel Mr.
Namberumal Chettiar's appointment as Receiver. The District Judge ordered his removal on the sole ground that his position as guardian is likely to impair his discharge of duties as Receiver. He has not considered the allegations contained in the affidavits filed before him. We do not think that the mere fact that the Receiver is the guardian of the boy whom the defendants have adopted, is sufficient ground for his removal from his appointment. Mr. Kerr says that a next friend of a minor should not be appointed as Receiver and in 24 Halsbury's Laws of England, the same statement is made. On referring to the authority which is quoted in support of the proposition, we find that such a rule is not enunciated by the learned Judges who decided the case.
See Taylor v. Oldham (1). We cannot uphold the order on the ground on which it is based. In this Court, affidavits and counteraffidavits have been filed which make definite allegations against the manager to whom Mr. Namberumal Chettiar has entrusted his duties. On the other hand, the manager has distinctly denied the allegations contained in the affidavits filed before the District Judge and in this Court. We think that the District Judge should consider the allegations made and come to a conclusion whether the continuance of Mr. Namberumal Chettiar is desirable in the interests of the trust.

Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar objects to our jurisdiction on the ground that as the power to appoint, granted to the District Judge under Order XL of the Code of Civil Procedure includes the power to dismiss the appointee, this Court acting under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and not under the Charter Act should not interfere. He relies upon section 16 of the General Clauses Act of 1897 for this argument. As at present advised, we are unable to hold that the power conferred by that section, would enable a Court appointing a Receiver to remove him. Mr. Ganapathy Aiyar also contended that prima facie, the appointment of a guardian as Receiver is not proper and it is for the party desiring to uphold the appointment to show the exceptional circumstances which would justify his continuance. But this is a case of an application to remove a person already appointed. It is on the party who invokes the aid of the Court to show that his continuance will prejudice the interests of the institution.

(1) (1822) 1 Jacob 527; 37 E. R. 949.

We think that the proper order to be passed is to set aside the one made by the District Judge and to direct him to make a fresh enquiry with reference to the allegations contained in the affidavits filed in this Court and in the Court below and to pass a final order.

Costs of both parties will come out of the estate.

Among Gujars of Gujar Khan Tahsil in the Rawalpindi District, a bequest of the whole of his property by a sonless Gujar to his mother and his maternal uncle in the presence of the collaterals, is invalid. [p. 910, col. 1.]

In a suit for a declaration by the collaterals of a person to the effect that the Will made by him of the whole of his property in favour of his mother and maternal uncle was invalid and would not affect the plaintiffs' rights after the death or remarriage of the mother, it was contended that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by time inasmuch as the Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act of 1900 did not deal with a suit such as the present which was launched only after the death of the alienor.

Held, overruling the objection, that the suit might adequately be described as a suit for a declaration that the alienation effected by the donor was void except for his life-time and that the alienation by Will would not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs. [p. 910, col. 2.]

Custom is a fact which must be proved by authoritative pronouncement or by instances in which it has been followed; it cannot be established by dialectics. [p. 911, col. 1.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shah, K.B., for the Appellants.

Mr. Nand Lal and Lala Madan Gopal, for the Hon'ble Mr. Shadi Lal, R.B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, Counsel for the respondents raises a preliminary objection that one Manga, one of the plaintiffs-appellants, has died and that the application to bring his representatives on to the record was not made within six months of his death. Counsel for the appellants admits that he is unable to meet the respondents' objection and he is willing that the appeal so far as Manga is concerned, should be held to have abated. Respondents then contended that since the appeal has abated as regards Manga, it has also abated so far as the remaining appellants are concerned. For this argument, respondents' Counsel were unable to find any justification. The suit brought was not based on any joint right, but on the several rights of all the plaintiffs. The suit could have been brought by the other plaintiffs exclusive of Manga and now that Manga retires from the appeal, there is no reason why it should not be continued by the plaintiffs who survive. Ghulam Hussain and Niaz Ali respondents have died whilst this appeal has been pending and their representatives have not been brought upon the record in time, but this point is of no importance for they are pro forma respondents, and the appeal can proceed without the inclusion of their representatives.

This case is brought by the near collaterals of Allah Ditta, Gujar of Gujar Khan Tahsil in the Rawalpindi District, for a declaration that the Will by which the said Allah Ditta on the 24th December 1899 bequeathed the whole of his property to his mother Musammal Kasim Bi and to his maternal uncle Gulab Khan is invalid and will not affect the plaintiffs' rights on the death or remarriage of Musammal Kasim Bi. Allah Ditta died shortly after making this Will and mutation was granted in accordance with the provisions of the Will in spite of the objections of the collaterals on the 26th February 1901. The first Court threw the burden of proving that by custom a sonless Gujar was not competent to make a testamentary disposition of the whole of his property, upon the plaintiffs and holding that the plaintiffs had not discharged the burden, it dismissed the suit. The Divisional Judge on appeal thought that the onus should be placed upon the defendants of proving that such a proprietor was competent in the presence of collaterals to alienate by Will the whole of his ancestral property and holding the defendant had not discharged the onus, he decreed for the plaintiffs.

Before this Court, Mr. Shafi for the appellants first contends that the onus should have been laid upon the plaintiffs and urges that if this Court holds that the Divisional Judge has rightly placed the onus still, as the onus was placed in the original Court upon the plaintiffs, a remand should in any case be granted by this Court in the event of the evidence upon the record being held insufficient to establish the defendants' contention.

Next, it was urged that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by time inasmuch as the Punjab Limitation Act of 1900 does not deal with a suit such as the present which is launched only after the death of the alienor. Mr. Shafi contends that the language of Article 1 of the Punjab Limitation Act of 1900 precludes the idea that a suit for a declaration that an alienation shall be void except for the life-time of the alienor can be brought when that life-time has come to an end. The matter, however, has been considered in Jivana v. Abdullah (1). The correctness of that judgment is challenged and it is contended that the language of the Limitation Act must be very strictly construed and that if a suit is brought which does not satisfy the definition of the article of limitation which it is sought to apply, it must be held that the article does not apply to that suit.

After careful consideration of this matter, we see no reason for holding that the decision reported as Jivana v. Abdullah (1), is incorrect. The intention of the Legislature is very obvious and whatever difficulty arises, is due solely to the infelicitous nature of the language used. The suit now before us, might be described quite adequately, although loosely, as a suit for a declaration that the alienation effected by Allah Ditta, was void except for his life-time. But it might just as well be described as a suit for a declaration that the alienation by Will should not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs, and that is clearly the intention of the plaintiffs.

They desire a decree declaring that the alienation shall be void against them as soon as they become entitled to the property affected.

We overrule the objection.

The next point is whether the custom on which defendants-appellants rely, has been established.

Defendants have produced thirteen instances, not all of the Gujar Khan Tahsil however, but we find that they go some way to establish a custom of gift or bequest by Gujars in favour of nephews or (more rarely) sisters' sons only.

Even after allowing that tribes in the western part of the Punjab are less restricted in the disposition of their ancestral property than the tribes of the Central Punjab, and after conceding that there appears to be a custom warranting special favours to nephews or sisters' sons, we are unable to hold that there exists a custom justifying a gift or bequest of the whole estate to a mother and a mother's brother, who stand in relation to the donor or testator in a very different position from that held by a nephew or a sister's son.

Custom, moreover, is a fact which must be proved by authoritative pronouncement or by instances in which it has been followed; it cannot be established by dialectics.

We hold then that the custom contended for by the appellant, is not established and as defendants-appellants produced a considerable body of evidence before the first Court, we see no probability whatever that a remand would enable them to strengthen their position.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 mortgaged to the 1st defendant certain properties. One Arunachella obtained a decree for money against the 1st defendant. An application for attachment was made on the 15th July. After notice to the debtors, the attachment was made on the 29th July. On the 10th August, the District Munsif dismissed the petition as "further steps were not taken." It is not clear what further steps were required to be taken by the attaching creditor. There is nothing in the order or in the papers before us to indicate that the creditor was guilty of any laches on his part and that the Court dismissed the petition on that ground. Under these circumstances, we must regard the dismissal as not having the effect of putting an end to the attachment. The Judicial Committee pointed out that the question whether by reason of the disposal of a petition, the attachment ceased to subsist, should be determined with reference to the facts of each case. We find no materials in this case for holding that the disposal was not for statistical purposes and was due to any neglect on the part of the creditor. The shortness of the time between the attachment and the dismissal, is an indication the other way. We are supported in this view by Rungasami Chetti v. Periasami Mudali (1). As pointed out in Imtiaz Ali v. Bishambhar Das (2) and Daul Ali Shah v. Ram Prasad (3), unless the order is withdrawn or dealt with on the merits, the presumption is that it is in force.

The second ground taken by the Subordinate Judge is equally untenable. There is no reason for holding that the new Code gave retrospective effect to the order passed in August 1907. This is not a matter of procedure only. The attaching creditor had acquired a right to subsistence of the attachment under the old Code. Nara Subba Reddy* (4) and in Vardiparthi Ramayya v. Korukonda Jayannadham (5) support this view.

We must reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remand the case to him for disposal on the merits not dealt with by him already. Costs will abide the result.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 176—Application for review, rejection of, by Assistant Collector, 2nd Class—Appeal, if maintainable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, r. 7.

Although under Order XLVII, rule 7, of the Civil Procedure Code, an order rejecting an application for review is not appealable, such an order, if passed by an Assistant Collector of the Second Class, is appealable to the Collector under section 176 of the Tenancy Act.

Reference made by the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, submitting the record to set aside the order of the Collector who reversed the order of the Assistant Collector, 2nd Class, in a suit for arrears of rent.

FACTS.—A decree for arrears having been passed, the decree-holder applied for ejectment and notice under section 59, is alleged to have been served. Money being not paid, an order for ejectment was passed. But before the order was carried out, the judgment-debtor applied for review of judgment to the Tahsildar who cancelled the order of ejectment. On appeal the Collector sent back the case, holding that the order of ejectment should not have been cancelled without giving the decree-holder an opportunity to show cause to the contrary. The Tahsildar after remand held that there were not sufficient grounds for reviewing his order of ejectment and maintained it.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the Collector and the objection taken by the decree-holder was that no appeal lay to the Collector. The Collector overruled the objection and held that the Tahsildar ought to have reviewed his order. The decree-holder went in revision to the Commissioner who in his order of reference to the Board said as follows:—"This application for review refers to a case in which a Tahsildar passed an order for the ejectment of a tenant under section 61 of the Tenancy Act. The Tahsildar was applied to review his order but he refused to do so. An appeal against the refusal was preferred to the Collector who accepted it, holding that the Tahsildar ought to have reviewed his order. The Collector granted the relief sought by the tenant. It is clear from Order XLVII, rule 7, that the Collector had no jurisdiction. The case will be submitted to the Board for orders."

JUDGMENT.—Under section 176 of the Tenancy Act any order passed by an Assistant Collector, 2nd Class, relating to the trial of any suit or application, is appealable to the Collector. Rule 7 of Order XLVII being inconsistent therefore, does not apply. There is no ground for revision. The application is dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge says that the plaintiff has got "only sub-partners". The plaintiff in his evidence says that they are his "lopayakari sharers." This may mean only that he has got assistants who get a share of the profits, or it may mean that they are dormant partners who can make claims against or under him.

As regards dormant partners, Lindley says at page 333 of his book: "But a dormant partner never need be joined as a co-plaintiff in an action on a contract entered into with the firm or with one of its members." [See also Kishen Parshad v. Har Narain Singh (1).]

I think, therefore, that the non-joinder of the plaintiff's immersed (which seems to be the literal meaning of lopayakari) sharers is not fatal to the suit.

JUDGMENT.—The case was admitted only on ground No. 2 and no other ground has been argued. As regards ground No. 2, I find in favour of respondents—Tasaddug Hussain v. Hayat-un-Nissa (1). That ruling, of course, deals with the old Code of Civil Procedure, but the law has not been altered. I agree with the view taken in that ruling and hold that under the Civil Procedure Code while an appeal lies [Order XLIII, rule 1 (d)] against an order refusing to set aside a decree passed ex parte, no appeal lies against an order setting aside such a decree; and that, advertent to section 105 (1) of the Code, any error, etc., made by a Court in setting aside an ex parte decree is not an error, etc., "affecting the decision of the case" and, therefore, cannot be "set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal." This being so, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SHEO MANGAL SINGH v. CHEDU.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is plaintiff's appeal in a suit for ejectment originally filed in the Court of an Assistant Collector. The plaintiff is admittedly the zemindar of the land in suit. In his plaint, he describes the two defendants, Chedu son of Dan and Chiddu son of Matru, Kunjras, as non-occupancy tenants of the land in suit. The defendants filed a written statement in which they described themselves as mortgagees in possession on behalf of the tenant-in-chief who was a tenant with occupancy rights. On their plea Mithu son of Faqira was added as a defendant. The Assistant Collector came to the conclusion that there had been a mortgage by Faqira father of Mithu in favour of the original defendants and that this fact alone was sufficient to oust his jurisdiction. He dismissed the suit accordingly. The District Judge was obviously inclined to the opinion that the Assistant Collector was wrong on the question of jurisdiction. He has, however, rightly remarked that the question was one which might be passed over in his Court, in virtue of the provisions of section 197 of the Agra Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901). He was of opinion that he had materials on the record sufficient to determine the appeal. He has found that there was a mortgage by Faqira in favour of the original defendants, and that this fact alone was sufficient to protect the said defendants from ejectment during the period of the mortgage. The plaintiff's suit having thus been dismissed by both the Courts below, it is contended in second appeal to this Court that the findings of the Court of first appeal are not sufficient to dispose of the case. The facts apparent from the record are somewhat peculiar. It would seem that the land was conveyed to the fathers of the two original defendants by two distinct transactions. There was a mortgage by Faqira in the month of May 1897 in favour of Matru for a period of 15 years. Before this period had expired, Faqira executed another mortgage in favour of Dan for a period of 20 years. The record does not show that Dan and Matru are related, though they are members of the same caste, and it would seem that their sons, the two defendants originally impleaded, are amicably in joint possession of the land in suit. After the death of Faqira, there was a suit for arrears of rent against Mithu which resulted in a decree in favour of the zemindar. If the latter had proceeded to eject Mithu for non-satisfaction of this decree, the mortgagees in possession would no doubt have had an opportunity of protecting themselves by paying into Court the amount of the decree money. It is not clear from the record whether any proceedings in ejectment had been commenced, but on the 29th of January 1911, Mithu relinquished his holding in favour of the plaintiff zemindar. Subsequently, Mithu himself brought a suit to get this relinquishment set aside, on the ground that it had been brought about by fraud or coercion and this suit failed. The learned District Judge has quoted authority for the position taken up by him, that Mithu was not entitled during the pendency of the mortgage in favour of Dan to relinquish his holding to the prejudice of the latter. It seems to me that there are two currents of opinion in this Court on this question. The matter came before a Full Bench recently in the case of Birj Kumar Lal v. Sheo Kumar Misra (1). In deciding that case, the Court laid stress on certain facts which had been concluded by the findings of the Court below. These were as follows:—(1) that the mortgage set up against the zemindar was for consideration and genuine; (2) that the object of the relinquishment was to defeat the mortgagee's rights. On these findings it was held that the Civil Court had rightly granted the mortgagee a declaration that the relinquishment by the tenant was ineffectual against him and an injunction restraining the zemindar from interfering with his possession. A number of authorities on the point are referred to by Tadboll, J., in his order in the case of Jai Gopal Narain Singh v. Uma Dut (2). It is clear that in some of the older cases of this Court, as for instance, Rannu Rai v. Rafi-ul din (3), the position had been broadly taken up that an occupancy tenant who, prior to the coming into force of the Agra Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901), had made a usufructuary mortgage of his holding and put the mortgagee into possession, could not during the subsistence of this mortgage relinquish his holding to the prejudice of the mortgagee's rights. If the principle thus broadly laid down, is accepted as of universal application, it would seem that there was no necessity in the more recent ruling to which I have referred, to discuss such a question as the object of the relinquishment, or the existence of collusion between the mortgagor and the zemindar. I take it that the law is finally settled to this extent, that an occupancy tenant who has mortgaged his holding under the circumstances stated and put the mortgagee in possession, cannot enter into a bargain with his zemindar so as to secure some collateral advantage for himself as consideration for the relinquishment of his holding, to the prejudice of the mortgagee whom he has himself put in possession. Whether any broader principle than this can be laid down as applicable to all cases, seems to me at least open to argument. The mortgagees, by refusing or neglecting to pay rent regularly to the zemindar, might obviously put their mortgagor in a very unpleasant position. It is all very well to say, as has been done in this case, that the mortgagee would be driven in the last extremity to protect the occupancy tenant from ejectment by paying into Court the amount of any decree which the zemindar might have obtained against him, but there seems no good reason why the occupancy tenant, while not in possession and not enjoying any benefit from the produce of the land, should be put to the trouble of defending a series of suits for arrears of rent because the mortgagee in possession has not troubled himself to pay the rent regularly. If the conditions of the mortgage were such as to bind the mortgagee to pay rent regularly to the zemindar, I think the Courts might well grant the mortgagor equitable relief against any breach of such condition and permit him to protect himself from further trouble by relinquishing his holding. Without, therefore, committing myself to any further attempt to define the law on this point, I think I have said enough to justify the conclusion that there should be some further findings of fact recorded, before the decision of the Courts below dismissing the plaintiff's suit, can be affirmed. I have to consider what issues should be remitted. In argument before me it has been suggested that the mortgages in favour of Dan and Matru have not been proved in accordance with law, and that there should be a finding both as to the factum of those mortgages and as to the passing of consideration. It does not seem to me that any plea to this effect can fairly be read into the memorandum of appeal filed by the plaintiff in this Court; nor do I think it is a plea which I should permit to be raised at this stage. The whole of the proceedings in the Courts below, and the findings of both those Courts, are based on the assumption that the defendants originally impleaded, were placed in possession by Faqira, as mortgagees in virtue of a bona fide mortgage or mortgages. As a matter of fact, the period of the mortgage in favour of Matru has expired, so that the only mortgage which can be set up in this case is that of 1901 in favour of Dan. As the case now stands before me, I do not think it necessary or advisable to call for any finding as to whether this mortgage was legally proved or was for consideration. I think the Courts below have virtually concluded these points in favour of the defendants.

There remains the question of the transactions connected with Mithu's relinquishment. I remit the following issues to the Courts below:—

(1) In relinquishing his rights as an occupancy tenant over the land in suit, did Mithu obtain for himself any collateral advantage from the plaintiff zemindar, or can it otherwise be said that the plaintiff and Mithu were acting in collusion to the prejudice of the original defendants?

(2) Were the original defendants, or either of them, as mortgagees of the land in suit, bound to pay the rent thereof regularly to the zemindar? Were they in any way responsible for the fact that the zemindar obtained a decree for arrears of rent against Mithu?

As the case has not been looked at in either of the Courts below from the point of view which I have taken, I think that the parties should be permitted to adduce evidence on these issues if they see fit to do so. The lower Appellate Court may record itself any additional evidence which the parties may offer, or cause the evidence to be taken by the Court of first instance but it must record its own findings. On return of the findings, 10 days will be allowed for objections.

Issues remitted.

An application by a judgment-debtor to record satisfaction of a decree made by him more than three years from the date of the decree as against him is barred, even though it may be within three months from the date of a revised decree as against defendants other than himself. The two decrees cannot be consolidated for purposes of limitation as one. [p. 918, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suit No. 295 of 1910, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Kumbakonam, in Execution Appeal No. 21 of 1910, in Original Suit No. 450 of 1905.

FACTS of the case appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"This appeal arises out of an application in execution of a decree. The District Munsif has held that the petition is barred by time to record or recognise the discharge pleaded and in the absence of a valid discharge, the decree is executable, and has accordingly dismissed the petition. The 2nd defendant appeals.

2. The following facts must be borne in mind in dealing with the points argued on appeal. Plaintiff, Gopalasami Chettiar, sued in Original Suit No. 450 of 1905 and obtained a decree ex parte against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and assigned the decree in favour of supplemental plaintiff, Natesa Aiyer. The assignee Natesa Aiyer got himself recognised as assignee-decree-holder and attached the properties of 1st defendant in the hands of 2nd defendant. It was then that 2nd defendant became aware of the decree ex parte and applied to have it set aside. The Court believed his allegations and restored the suit for re-trial. The assignee-decree-holder was also impleaded as supplemental plaintiff. On the defence of the 2nd defendant issues as to the liability of 2nd defendant, for the debts of his father's trade and as to satisfaction of the claim by the 3rd defendant, were raised. Plaintiff Gopalasami and his assignee, the present respondent, did not conduct the suit and allowed it to go by default. The Court, instead of dismissing the suit in toto, dismissed it as against 2nd defendant on the 27th November 1909. The present petition was put in on 5th January 1910 and the connected petition for the same relief in the shape of review, was put in on 3rd December 1909.

3. It is clear from the above resume of the facts that the 2nd defendant (appellant) was prevented by reason of fraudulent service of summons on him in the suit from the knowledge of the decree ex parte till the attachment made by the respondent brought the whole fraud to his notice. He immediately applies for setting aside the decree ex parte, and raises in the restored suit the question of the satisfaction of the claim too. The respondent frustrates an investigation of the satisfaction by allowing the suit to go by default. The lower Court ought to have dismissed the suit in toto after this conduct of the plaintiffs or at least gone into the question of satisfaction raised by issue III in the suit and recorded a finding thereon. The procedure adopted by the SAMBASIVA AIYAR v. MUHAMAD HUSSAIN.

Court in dismissing the suit only as regards 2nd defendant alone has led to the 2nd defendant raising the question of the satisfaction over again in the execution proceedings. It will be seen that the respondent has by his own conduct prevented an adjudication on the question of satisfaction of the claim. I, therefore, hold that this petition presented within three months of the revised decree brought about by the fraudulent conduct of respondent is not barred by limitation under section 18 and Article 174 of the Limitation Act, 1908.

Section 14, clause (2), thereof also allows deduction of the period between the application to set aside decree ex parte and the revised decree as occupied by a proceeding in which 2nd defendant expected the same relief in good faith, but was thwarted by the strategic move of the plaintiffs in allowing the suit to go by default. In that view also, this petition is not barred.

4. There is no force in the contention that the order on the connected petition Miscellaneous Appeal No. 1928 of 1909 having become final by reason of there being no appeal therefrom, bars the present appeal as res judicata. The contention is as ingenious as it is unintelligible.

5. It was contended for the appellant that the revised decree must be taken to be a final decision in favour of the defence on the question of satisfaction also. The onus on that issue is on the defence and no evidence has been let in on the issue in question. The decree cannot be taken to be an adjudication at least on the merits to operate as res judicata outside the provisions of res judicata under section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I, therefore, disallow the contention.

6. The other interesting questions argued as to whether respondent can rely on his recognition prior to his revised decree to continue execution, whether the attachment is a valid one by reason of the death of 1st defendant and is alive till after revised decree and whether the properties could be sold in execution in the hands of the 2nd defendant as properties of the 1st defendant by reason of the dismissal of the suit not covering the decree against the 1st defendant too, cannot be gone into at this stage without further evidence. They will all be considered in due course by the District Munsif if necessary.

7. I, therefore, set aside the order of the District Munsif, and remand the petition for disposal according to law after raising the issue as to the question of satisfaction, the validity of the recognition of respondent for purposes of the revised decree, and other questions as may legitimately arise on the petition. Costs to abide and be provided for in the revised order."

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The object of the 1st respondent's petition to the Munsif was to get satisfaction of the decree recorded on the ground that the 3rd defendant discharged the amount due under it in 1906. The petition was presented in only 1910. Prima facie, the application was barred. We fail to see how section 14 or section 18 of the Limitation Act could save the application. In fact, the 1st respondent clearly stated before the Munsif that he did not rely on either of those sections. The prior proceedings relied on to attract section 14, had quite a different object in view. The fact that the 1st respondent then stated that the 3rd defendant had discharged the decree debt, would not make the section applicable. The 2nd defendant was admittedly aware of the alleged discharge in 1908. We cannot understand how the Subordinate Judge could imagine that section 18 could apply in the circumstances. The 1st respondent contends that the decree against the 1st and 3rd defendants and the subsequent revised decree with regard to the 2nd defendant, should be treated as one consolidated decree, and that his application was put in within three months from the date of the second decree and was, therefore, within time, and he relies on the judgment of the Privy Council in Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (1). There the suit was on a mortgage and their Lordships held that the plaintiff was entitled to a joint decree for sale against all the defendants so as to enable the Court to sell the property effectually. It was on this ground that the two decrees were treated as a single decree and the application for sale, which was within three years from the date of the 2nd decree, was held to be not barred. This case is not similar to the one before the Privy Council. A decree for money may be passed against different defendants at different times, and there is no reason for treating the two decrees as one. The result of upholding the 1st respondent's contention, would lead to the anomaly of a decree which was passed in 1909 as capable of being discharged in 1906.

The 1st respondent contends that he is entitled to resist execution by the 2nd plaintiff Ananda Natesa Aiyar, who, he says, is not the real assignee of the decree. If so, his proper course is to resist any application that the assignee may present to execute the decree.

We reverse the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the Munsif's order with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.—Assuming (without deciding) that there is in this case a covenant by the lessor to renew which is legally enforceable against him in a suit for specific performance, such a covenant cannot be pleaded in bar to a suit for possession brought by the lessor on the expiry of the term mentioned in the lease-deed, Exhibit E. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6—Relinquishment—Reversionary rights—Settlement of disputed claim.

GNANAMBAL AMMAL v. VEERASAMI CHETTY.

One Bhagga Lal died possessed of certain property and his daughter-in-law got possession of it. On the death of the daughter-in-law, one Barati Lal made an application for mutation of names on the ground that he was the heir of Bhagga Lal. This application was opposed by Mohan Dei daughter of Bhagga Lal. The dispute resulted in execution of a document by which Barati Lal for a consideration of Rs. 5,000 and on receipt of certain immoveable property, abandoned his entire claim to the property recognizing Musammam Mohan Dei to be absolute owner of it.

Held, that the transaction was not a sale of the reversionary rights of Barati Lal, but was a settlement of disputed claims and was not void under section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated the 21st September 1914.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokul Prasad and Mr. Sarat Chandra Chowdhry, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff-respondent claimed possession of a house purchased by him from two persons, namely, Musammam Shamo and Khunni Lal. He purchased half the house from Musammam Shamo and the other half from Khunni Lal on different dates. There is no dispute in this appeal in respect to the half share purchased from Musammam Shamo. As regards the half share purchased from Khunni Lal the facts are these:—The share in question belonged to Bhagga Lal and after his death, was apparently in the possession of his daughter-in-law, the widow of a predeceased son. Upon her death, the appellant Barati Lal made an application in the Revenue Court for the entry of his name as the heir of Bhagga Lal and the owner of his property. This application was resisted by Musammam Mohan Dei, the daughter of Bhagga Lal, who asserted that her father was separate and that she was entitled to succeed to the property. The dispute resulted in the execution of a document on the 24th of May 1911 by Barati Lal which purported to be a deed of relinquishment. By that document, Barati Lal, for a consideration of Rs. 5,000 and on receipt of certain immoveable property, abandoned all his claim to the estate of Bhagga Lal, and recognized the title of Musammam Mohan Dei as absolute owner. Musammam Mohan Dei being dead, the property passed to her husband Khunni Lal who sold it to the plaintiff. Barati Lal's contention was that the transaction of the 24th of May 1911 was a sale by him of his reversionary rights and was, therefore, invalid under the provisions of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. This contention found favour in the Court of first instance, but was overruled by the lower Appellate Court which decreed the claim of the plaintiff. In our opinion, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The learned Judge held that the transaction of the 24th of May 1911 was in fact and substance a settlement of disputed claims. We agree with this view. There was a claim put forward by Barati Lal to the property of Bhagga Lal as the person entitled to it upon the death of Bhagga Lal's daughter-in-law. That claim was denied by Musammam Mohan Dei. One party approached the other and upon receipt of consideration from Musammam Mohan Dei, Barati Lal abandoned his claim to the property. This was not a mere transfer of reversionary rights within the meaning of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act. The case is very similar to that of Mohammad Hashmat Ali v. Kaniz Fatima (1). In this view, the appeal must fail, and it is unnecessary to consider the question of estoppel which was argued with great ability on behalf of the appellant. We dismiss the appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

The term "legal representative" in section 2, clause (11), of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased and the fact that this definition is not found in the old Code does not make it any the less applicable, based as it is on sound legal principles. JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. Her paternal uncle Narayanasawmi Chetty died in March 1899 leaving a Will dated May 1898. Under the terms of that Will, the plaintiff lands (11 and odd acres) were given to the plaintiff and to the plaintiff's mother (the 2nd defendant). The plaintiff was to take 4 acres 36 cents absolutely and the 2nd defendant to take the remaining 6 acres 15 cents for life with reversion to the plaintiff. Narayanasawmi Chetty also left a widow, the 3rd defendant, to whom other properties were left by his Will. He owed money at his death to one B. M. Marakayar. That creditor, not knowing the existence of the Will and having to bring his suit for the debt before it was barred, filed Small Cause Suit No. 1068 of 1899 soon after the death of Narayanasawmi Chetty treating his widow (3rd defendant) and his illegitimate son as the heirs and legal representatives of Narayanasawmi Chetty. He also found that the 3rd defendant was in possession of the plaintiff land item No. 2 (7 acres and 74 cents). He obtained a decree and in execution brought item No. 2 to sale and at that sale, the 5th defendant became the purchaser in 1901 and obtained possession as such Court auction-purchaser in July 1901 ejecting the 3rd defendant.

The executor mentioned in the Will (of Narayanasawmi Chetty) who is the 1st defendant in this suit, took no steps till 1903 to administer the Will or to get possession of Narayanasawmi Chetty's properties as executor. The plaintiff has brought this suit as a legatee under the Will of Narayanasawmi Chetty to recover 4 acres 36 cents out of the plaintiff 11 acres 1 cent, and her contention is that the decree obtained by the Marakayar creditor against the estate of Narayanasawmi Chetty in a suit to which neither the plaintiff nor the executor (1st defendant) was made a party defendant, was not binding on her or the estate and that the sale proceedings held in execution of that decree conveyed no title to the purchaser (5th defendant).

It is unnecessary to consider the plaintiff's claim to plaintiff item 1, as her dispute with the 4th defendant in respect of that item was abandoned (by a compromise) in the Court of first instance. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit as against the 5th defendant and the plaintiff item No. 2 in his possession, on the ground that the decree of 1899 obtained by the creditor against the 3rd defendant (and against the testator's illegitimate son) and the execution proceedings in that suit were binding on the estate of the deceased and, therefore, on the plaintiff and on the 1st defendant.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar contended on the authority of Kaliappan Servai Karan v. Vardarajulu (1) that where a wrong person was impleaded as legal representative of a deceased debtor in a suit brought after the death of the debtor, execution could not validly issue against the properties which had vested in the proper legal representative and that the proper legal representatives in this case as regards the plaint item No. 2 were the legatees under the Will, namely, the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant. At least, that was how I understood the learned Vakil's argument at the commencement of this case. However, during the course of the argument, section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act came under discussion, that section stating that the "executor of a deceased person is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such." Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar thereupon argued that as the executor, 1st defendant, was not made a party to the Small Cause Suit of 1899, the execution taken out against the plaint properties conveyed no title to the purchaser.

It is unnecessary for me to express a final opinion on the question decided in Kaliappan Servai Karan v. Vardarajulu (1). What was decided in that case, was that the true legal representative cannot, after the decree, be brought on the record for the purpose of execution and that the deceased debtor's property in his hands, cannot be attached and sold in that same suit. In Kali Charan Nath v. Sukhada Sundari Debi (2), Mookerjee, J., decided a similar case to that in Kaliappan Servai Karan v. Vardarajulu (1) on similar reasons and held that the remedy for the decree-holder who had obtained a decree against the wrong legal representative is "either to have the decree vacated, the suit restored" and the proper legal representative brought on the record and a new decree made against him "or to institute a suit on the judgment and to obtain a decree thereon against" the true legal representative and then to execute the new decree against the property which had vested in the true legal representative. As regards these two cases, it seems to me with the greatest respect that they do not give sufficient weight to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in several cases, that decree-holders and purchasers in Court auction, should not be deprived of their legitimate rights on bare technicalities where the merits are clearly in their favour. In General Manager of the Raj Durbhanga v. Maharajah Comar Ramaput Singh (3), their Lordships said: "These proceedings certainly illustrate what was said by Mr. Doyne and what has been often stated before, that the difficulties of a litigant in India begin when he has obtained a decree." In that case, A obtained a decree against B's widow, B having died pending the suit. The interest of the widow was sold in execution. The contention of the respondent was that the widow did not represent the estate as the deceased debtor had left a son. Their Lordships, however, held that the estate itself, that is, the right of the deceased debtor in the property was properly sold as that was intended to be sold and the proceedings had all been conducted bona fide. Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, however, distinguished the present case and the case of Kaliappan Servai Karan v. Vardarajulu (1), from the Privy Council case and other similar cases on the ground that where the debtor's wrong representative was sued in the first instance (and was not brought in as a legal representative owing to the debtor's dying during the pendency of the suit), the sale of the deceased debtor's property in execution will not pass the debtor's interests. As I said before, Kaliappan Servai Karan v. Vardarajulu (1) decided only that execution proceedings, if objected to by the right representative who had not been made a party to the suit before decree, should be dismissed and not that if the wrong representative had been bona fide added or sued and a decree had been obtained and the property of the deceased had been brought to sale, the sale itself was invalid and could not affect the estate of the deceased. In that same volume a case Ramasawmi Chettiar v. Oppilamani Chetti (4), is reported which was argued by eminent Vakils on both sides and it was held therein that a decree-holder may select from among several rival claimants to the estate of his judgment-debtor, any one whom he believes honestly to have the best prima facie title as legal representative and that that representation in the absence of fraud or collusion will be sufficient to validate sales held in execution and to convey the title of the deceased judgment-debtor through such sales. The broad principle of the decision in that case clearly seems to me to apply to the present case.

I would further remark that under the definition of "legal representative" in the new Civil Procedure Code of 1908, the 3rd defendant might be properly treated till 1901 as the proper legal representative of her husband Narayanasawmy Chetty so far as the plaint item No. 2 is concerned and could be sued as such legal representative so as to obtain a valid decree against her in order to make item No. 2 validly liable for the satisfaction of the decree-debt. Section 2, clause 11, Civil Procedure Code says that "legal representative" includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased. Taking it that the 1st defendant was also a proper legal representative as the person in whom the estate legally vested, the 3rd defendant who was in possession of item No. 2 and, therefore, intermeddled with the estate, can likewise be treated as the "legal representative" of Narayanasawmy Chetty till she lost possession of item No. 2 in consequence of the delivery proceedings in 5th defendant's favour. No doubt, the definition of "legal representative" in the Act of 1908 was not found in the old Civil Procedure Code. But it seems to me that the definition is based on sound legal principles which were applicable even before the new Code was enacted. As regard the case in Siva Bhagiam v. Palani Padiachi (5) was doubtless held in that case that a person who was in possession of the deceased's estate and who was sued as his legal representative, could not validly represent the estate so as to pass a valid title to the Court auction-purchaser who purchased the property in her hands in execution of the decree passed against her as such legal representative. With the greatest respect, I dissent from that ruling and I think it must be taken as impliedly overruled by the decision in Ramasawmi Chettiar v. Oppilamani Chetty (4).

In the result, I would dismiss the second appeal with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I agree. This case seems to me to be covered by the decision in General Manager of the Raj Dhurbhanga v. Maharajah Kumar Ramput Singh (3), it being a suit against the estate of the deceased.

immoveable properties belonging to himself and his brother, and another suit was filed by the brother for ejectment of Murugesu Chetty who had occupied a portion of the family property. When the suits came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Bakewell, His Lordship ruled that the issues did not cover the whole case, and directed additional issues to be framed on payment of costs incurred up-to-date. The costs were not paid, and at the final hearing, His Lordship directed the additional issues to be struck out, and decreed the suit for the plaintiff. Defendant appealed against that decree.

Mr. V. Sivaprakasam Mudaliar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Ethiraya Mudaliar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in this case applied for fresh issues which were granted on terms of paying the costs incurred up-to-date. The defendant did not pay them, and the learned Judge, when the case was set down for final disposal, first struck out the additional issues on 23rd October 1914, and afterwards on 5th November 1914 set aside the written statement of the defendant under rule 17 of the High Court Fee Rules 1902 for non-payment of the costs above referred to and decided the case ex parte on the plaintiffs' evidence. Under rule 17 of the High Court Fee Rules 1902, when the costs of an interlocutory order are not paid, the other side may apply by summons in Chambers or on the hearing of any application by the party in default that all or any proceedings in the suit or matter may be stayed or set aside, or that any subsequent steps taken by the party ordered to pay such costs, may be set aside for irregularity, and the Court may thereupon make such order as it thinks fit.

On appeal, it was argued before us that assuming the learned Judge was empowered to strike out the additional issues and set aside the written statement for non-payment of the costs of an interlocutory order, according to the provisions of the rule such an order could only be made on a summons in Chambers or on the hearing of an application by the party in default and not at the final hearing. The provisions of this rule are highly penal, Twycroft v. Grant (1), Twycroft v. Grant (2) and should, therefore, be strictly pursued. In In re Wickham, Marony v. Taylor (3), Cotton, L. J., observed that the practice was to make orders of this kind on application properly made but not at the hearing, and Lindley, L. J., agreed that Kekewich, J., was wrong in ordering a stay for non-payment of costs at the hearing. The same principle applies to orders against the defendant for non-payment of costs and both are governed by the same rule. In these circumstances, we must set aside the decree and orders of the learned Judge and remand the case for disposal according to law. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Appeal allowed; Suit remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 157, O. XXI, r. 1—“Rules made,” meaning of—Interpretation of Statute—Rule abridging substantive right, if ultra vires—Civil Rules of Practice, rule 49, effect of—Printed copy of judgment not filed with memorandum of appeal—Appeal, whether time-barred.

Where a rule abridges a substantive right granted by a Statute, such a rule is ultra vires, unless the Statute itself empowers the rule-making authority to alter the provisions in the Statute. [p. 925, col. 2.]

Madurai Pillai v. Muthu Chetty, 22 Ind. Cas. 775; 15 M. L. T. 156; (1914) M. W. N. 216; 26 M. L. J. 227; 1 L. W. 172 (F. B.), followed.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The expression “rules made” in section 157 of the Civil Procedure Code must mean rules properly and validly made, in other words, made with jurisdiction by the proper authority. [p. 926, col. 1.]

Rules which though purporting to be made under the old Code were beyond the powers given by the Code, do not become valid by reason of the fact that if they had been made under the new Code they would be valid. [p. 926, col. 1.]

Rule 49 of the Civil Rules of Practice seems to enact by implication that the production of a printed copy along with the memorandum of appeal is compulsory where the length of the judgment or order exceeds 700 words, and is ultra vires. [p. 625, col. 2.]

Per Napier, J.—(1) Rule 49 of the Civil Rules of Practice does not have the effect of making the presentation of a printed copy of a judgment compulsory when it is over 700 words. [p. 926, col. 2.]

(2) Filing a certified copy of a judgment with the memorandum of appeal, is a sufficient compliance with Order XLI, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code and is not forbidden by the Civil Rules of Practice. [p. 927, col. 1]

Where, therefore, an appeal is presented within the period of limitation and a certified copy of the judgment appealed against is filed along with the memorandum of appeal but a printed copy of the judgment is filed out of time, the appeal is not time-barred. [p. 926, col. 2; p. 927, col. 1]

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair, in Second Appeal No. 863 of 1912, preferred against the decree of the District Court of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No.—of 1911 (Original Suit No. 204 of 1911, on the file of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevely).

FACTS.—The appellant brought a suit for redemption of a mortgage against the mortgagors. The suit was dismissed on the ground that some other persons interested in the mortgaged properties were not made parties to the suit. An appeal to the District Court of Tinnevely was dismissed on the ground that the appellant had not produced a printed copy of the judgment as required by rule 49, Madras High Court Civil Rules of Practice, the District Judge declining to excuse the delay under section 5 of the Limitation Act. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court and Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair, in dismissing the appeal, held that the District Judge was right. Against that decree, the plaintiff presented this Letters Patent Appeal.

Messrs. N. C. Vijayaraghavachari and A. Srinivasachari, for Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA Aiyar, J.—Under the old Civil Procedure Code, section 652, the High Court had power to make rules to regulate the procedure in the mufussil Courts only so far as such rules were consistent with that Code. Section 541 of the old Code made it compulsory on the appellant to produce a copy of the decree and a copy of the judgment (the latter unless dispensed with by the Appellate Court) along with the memorandum of appeal. I am inclined to hold that it is not consistent with that section to make any rule imposing a further obligation on the appellant that the copy which he produces, should be a printed copy. In Madurai Pillai v. Muthu Chetty (1), a Full Bench of this Court held that where a rule abridges a substantive right granted by the Statute, such a rule is ultra vires, unless the Statute itself empowers the rule-making authority to alter the provisions in the Statute. In that case, the substantive right in question was a right to have a trial by a Full Bench of the Presidency Small Cause Court. The right to appeal, which is the right in question in the present case, is clearly no less a substantive right.

Rule 49 of the Civil Rules of Practice was passed in pursuance of the powers given to the High Court by the old Civil Procedure Code. Though that rule does not expressly state that the production of a printed copy with the memorandum of appeal is compulsory where the judgment of the lower Court is more than 700 words in length, the sentence occurring therein that "in cases where the length of the judgment or order does not exceed 700 words, the production of a printed copy is not compulsory," seems to me to enact by an implication that such production is compulsory in the case of a judgment or order exceeding 700 words.

Taking it then that rule 49, when it was passed, was ultra vires, we have to consider the effect of section 157 of the present Civil Procedure Code which enacts, among other things, that rules made under the former Code of Civil Procedure shall, so far as they are consistent with the present Code of 1908, have the same force and effect as if they had been made under the present Code. Under the new Code, the power of the High Court to make rules is governed by sections 122 and 128. The difference between the old section 652 and the new sections 122 and 128, so far as this question is concerned, is that while under section 652, the rules had to be consistent with all the provisions of the old Code, the new sections 122 and 128 empower the High Court to annul, alter or add to all or any of the rules framed in the First Schedule attached to the new Code. Section 541 of the old Code relating to the presentation of the appeal corresponds to Order XLI, rule 1, in the First Schedule of the new Code and hence the provision in Order XLI, rule 1, about producing a copy of the judgment might (according to sections 122 and 128) be validly changed by a rule of the High Court requiring a printed copy instead of an ordinary certified copy. Thus rule 42 of the Civil Rules of Practice, if it can be treated by virtue of section 157 to be a rule passed under the new Code, would be a valid rule. But does section 157 continue the rules passed under the repealed enactment, even though those rules were beyond the powers given to the High Court by the repealed enactment? In other words, are the rules, purporting to be framed under the old Code but beyond the powers given thereby, within the meaning of the expression 'rules made under any Code of Civil Procedure' occurring in section 157 of the new Code? Does not the word 'made' mean "validly made"? In Re reference under Stamp Act; District Munsif of Tiruvallur (2), the converse proposition was upheld, namely, that rules made under the old Civil Procedure Code, though inconsistent with an order of the new Civil Procedure Code, remained in force until new rules were framed under the new Civil Procedure Code. But I do not think that that ruling helps us much in the decision of the question whether rules which were invalidly framed under the old Code become valid if consistent with the new Code. I am inclined to hold that rules which, though purporting to be made under the old Code, were beyond the powers given by the old Code, do not become valid by reason of the fact that, if they had been made under the new Code, they would be valid. I think the expression 'rules made' in section 157 must mean rules properly and validly made, in other words, made with jurisdiction by the proper authority.

(1) 22 Ind. Cas. 775; 1 L. W. 172; 15 M. L. T. 156; (1914) M. W. N. 216; 26 M. L. J. 227 (F. B.).

(2) 20 Ind. Cas. 775; 37 M. 17; 24 M. L. J. 637 (F. B.).

In the result and for the reasons above given I would allow the appeal and direct the District Judge to hear the appeal preferred to his Court, the appeal having been properly presented within the limitation period along with a certified copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance, though that copy was not a printed copy. Costs hitherto will abide.

NAPIER, J.—The District Judge has dismissed this appeal, holding that it is out of time and declining to extend the period under section 5 of the Limitation Act. It is common ground that if the manuscript copy of the judgment of the lower Court supplied by the Court and certified as correct and filed in the Appellate Court can be used, the appeal would be in time. The District Judge has held that the judgment being over 700 words and not being printed, it cannot be used, as its use is forbidden by the Civil Rules of Practice, 1905, rule 49, and this view is upheld by the learned Judge of this Court before whom the second appeal came on for hearing under Order XLI, rule 11. The appeal is filed under Order XLI, rule 1, which requires that the memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree and (unless dispensed with by the Court) of the judgment on which it is founded. If I thought that rule 49 of the Civil Rules of Practice had the effect contended for, I should think it necessary to consider whether so long as Order XLI (1) remains in its present form, the rule was not ultra vires; but I am of opinion that the rule has not that effect. It is true that the rule says in cases where the length of the judgment does not exceed 700 words, the production of a printed copy is not compulsory. The word "produced" is not to be found in the Code in this connection and, though it may be taken to mean produced for the purpose of an appeal, the rule does not make clear whether the production refers to the work of the copying department or the work of the appellant. Still less does it say that only a printed copy can be filed with the memorandum of appeal. The rule itself is a direction to the copying department and there is no rule that requires an intending appellant to apply specially for a copy for appeal purposes or forbids him to use a copy obtained for perusal for his appeal. Such a rule would properly appear in rules for procedure on appeal, not among rules for copies of records. It may be that the Court might refuse to take up an appeal until the appellant supplied it with a printed copy (I express no definite opinion on that point), but I am satisfied that filing a certified copy with the memorandum is a compliance with Order XLI (1) and is not forbidden by the Civil Rules of Practice. I would, therefore, allow this appeal and direct the District Judge to take the case on his file under Order XLI, rule 9.

Appeal allowed.

Muhammadian Law—Nawayat community—Two brothers and their descendants living and trading together as members of undivided family—Rights of parties inter se, how determined—Hindu Law, how far applicable—Hindu family firm and Muhammadan family firm, difference between—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 241—Act how far applicable to Hindu and Muhammadan family trading firms—Custom, connotation of.

Prior to 1845, one Haji Hassan, a Muhammadan belonging to the Nawayat community and trading separately on his own account, associated with him his younger brother, Hammed, in the trade. In 1845, on the eve of his departure to Mecca, he executed a document whereby, in the event of his not returning from his pilgrimage, he directed that Hammed should get one-eighth of his properties. Hassan returned from Mecca in 1848 and till 1866, when Hammed died, the two brothers lived together and traded together. Their relations were very cordial, Hammed's son marrying Hassan's daughter. Hassan died in 1870. During the life-time of the brothers properties were acquired indiscriminately in the name of either. Till 1910, the descendants of the two branches of the family lived together as if they were members of an undivided family and trade was carried on as usual, the accounts standing in the name of one or the other of the representatives of the branches who happened to manage the trade for the time being. In 1910, the present suit was instituted by the members of the younger branch against the members of the elder branch for a partition. It was conceded by the defendants that Hammed and his heirs were entitled to one-eighth of the properties covered by the document of 1845:

Held, per Sadasiva Aiyar, J., (Tyabji, J., dissenting).—That all the properties ought to be equally divided between the heirs of the two branches of the family, inasmuch as from 1848 till the date of suit, the two brothers, their heirs and the heirs of their heirs had acted in such a manner as to show that they had all understood their rights as following from the properties being held in common ownership between the two branches for more than 60 years and the imperfect understanding or agreement between the two brothers which began in 1848, had become fully perfected by their own conduct and the conduct of their heirs. [p. 947, col. 1.]

Per Tyabji, J.—That Hammed and his heirs were entitled to one-eighth of the properties mentioned in the document of 1845, the remaining seven-eighths of the suit properties and all other properties acquired prior to 1870 belonging exclusively to Haji Hassan and his sons, and that the properties acquired after 1870 must be equally divided amongst the heirs of Haji Hassan and Hammed in accordance with Muhammadan Law. [p. 933, col. 1; p. 934, col. 2.]

The term 'joint family', when applied to parties governed by the Muhammadan Law of succession, presumably refers to a group of persons belonging originally to one family and living together without having partitioned such property as they have inherited from some common ancestor. Their continuing so to live, does not make their status different from what it would have been, had they not done so. Nor does the fact that they have not partitioned the property in any way, affect their rights therein or the legal incidents applicable to the property. No person can by birth derive an interest in the property belonging to his father during his life-time. The members of the group of persons so living together, do not form any legal unit. They are not necessarily heirs of one another. Property acquired by one of them does not necessarily form the property of the whole group. The group as constituted at any particular moment, is not the legal representative or the continuous successor in law of the persons who constituted the group in a previous generation. The result of this is that it cannot be said that all the property which at any time in the past belonged to the group as a whole, continues to belong to the persons now included, whether arbitrarily or according to agnatic descent, in the group. Membership of the group does not necessarily imply that a member has any share in all the property possessed by each of the other members, or kept in the possession of some person as the manager on behalf of all the group, whether such possession is held at their request or with their consent or merely with their acquiescence. [p. 935, cols. 1 & 2.]

Unlike under Hindu Law, under Muhammadan Law the mere fact that one person allows another to live with him and treat him as though he were a co-owner with himself of property which is shown initially to belong to him alone, cannot make the other a co-owner, though, if the origin and ownership of the property is not traced and it is not known which of them is the owner, such circumstances may raise a presumption of co-ownership. [p. 936, col. 2.]

The mode of living adopted by parties, cannot affect the law to which they are subject. [p. 937, col. 1.]

In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, express or implied from the conduct of the parties and their mode of life in any particular case, co-owners of property under Muhammadan Law, even if they live together, are expected to pay for their maintenance and other expenses out of their own shares in the property held in co-ownership. [p. 937, col. 2.]

Under Muhammadan Law, property acquired with the aid of what would be called 'ancestral property' according to the Mitakshara Law, does not become 'ancestral,' though acquisitions by co-owners with the aid of property held in co-ownership, do accede to that property. [p. 937, col. 2.]

The word 'custom', in its legal sense, necessarily connotes only such rules of conduct as affect rights and liabilities. The ways of living or the observances of a particular class of persons do not become customary rules of law merely because evidence of such ways and observances has to be adduced for the elucidation of the facts existing in any particular case. [p. 939, cols. 1 & 2.]

Though the provisions of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, are applicable to a Hindu family firm as well, yet in respect of such firms the incidents of the Act are affected by the peculiar doctrines of the joint Hindu family, which are impliedly incorporated in the law of Hindu ancestral firms. [p. 940, col. 1.]

The cases regarding Hindu family firms only lay down that, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the Indian Contract Act must be presumed to govern the relations between the members of such a firm and that the contract to the contrary may be an implied contract, which may even be presumed from the mode of life resulting from the general personal law of the parties, especially when not presuming such an implied contract, would bring about inconsistencies and results not contemplated by the parties. [p. 940, cols. 1 & 2.]

In the case of Muhammadans, section 241 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, has a direct operation, as in their case there is no contract to the contrary nor does their personal law operate so as to make them partners to any extent or otherwise to minimise the effect of the section on their rights. [p. 941, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Many of the incidents of Hindu joint family system obtain by custom among the Narayats. [p. 943, col. 2.]

Except that the principle of survivorship and that of right by birth as well as that of exclusion of females, are inapplicable in considering the rights and liabilities of the persons on whom the business of a Narayati family has descended as heirs, in other respects, the principles and considerations applying to the business of Hindu family firms, are applicable to the business carried on by a Narayati family. [p. 946, col. 1.]

Though the term 'undivided family' cannot properly be used to designate the relationship of the families of two Narayati Muhammadan brothers living together and trading together, yet the analogy of the business of a joint Hindu trading family is applicable to such a family. [p. 946, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Canara in Original Suit No. 6 of 1910.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Iyengar and B. Sitarana Rau, for the Appellants.—Under the document of 1845 (Exhibit XVI), Hammed was only entitled to one-eighth of the properties mentioned therein. The plaintiffs are not entitled to a share in any other properties as the theory of an undivided family is unknown to Muhammadan Law. There was nothing in the conduct of Haji Hassan to show that he admitted Hammed to co-ownership with him in all his properties. The mere living together of the members of the two branches, cannot confer on them the status of an undivided family. Further, no question of partnership can arise on the pleadings as they are based on co-ownership and not partnership.

Messrs. K. Narain Rau and G. Annaji Rau, for the 1st Respondent and Mr. H. Balakrishna Rau, for the 15th and 17th Respondents. The course of dealings between the parties and their conduct throughout clearly show that the parties constituted an undivided family. Any imperfection that might have originally existed, has become perfected by the subsequent conduct not only of the brothers, but also of their heirs and the heirs of these heirs. Vide Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (1). The Narayatis have adopted several of the incidents of Hindu Law. Vide Khatija v. Ismail (2). The business must be treated as a family trade and all the heirs must be treated as partners. Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (3). The decree of the lower Court is, therefore, correct.

HOSSAIN SAIB V. HASSAN SAIB.

JUDGMENT.

TYABJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit which has been referred to as a suit for partition. In reality, its subject-matter consists of what might have given rise to several suits for partition, for administration and perhaps for dissolutions of partnership, relating to the estates of persons who lived and carried on business in the beginning and middle of the last century.

It is not disputed that the parties are governed by the Muhammadan Law of succession and inheritance. Whether their mode of life will affect the law applicable to the property acquired or inherited by them, is one of the many questions that will have to be considered.

I will deal in the first instance with the history of the family; and will then consider the rights of the parties in the circumstances and events that are proved.

In referring to the names of the parties, I shall try to adhere to the same corrupt form which the parties themselves seem to have adopted.

One Shavaki Abdul Rajack is admitted to have been the common ancestor of the parties chiefly concerned in this litigation. Shavaki Abdul Rajack had four sons: (1) Shiddi Bave; (2) Ismail Saheb; (3) Haji Hassan and (4) Hammed Saheb.

The parties to these proceedings are mostly the descendants of (3) and (4). The plaintiff is descended from the fourth of these, Hammed, and the contesting defendants Nos. 9 to 13 are descended from the third, Haji Hassan. They may be referred to as members of the younger and elder branches respectively. On the 10th of March 1818 the four sons of Shavaki Abdul Rajack effected what is referred to as a partition. Exhibits VI, VII, VIII, XI and XIV evidence that partition. Certain specific properties were then allotted to each of the said four sons of Shavaki Abdul Rajack in the life-time of the father. It does not appear from the evidence whether these four sons or any of them inherited any other property from their father on his death. It must be assumed for the purpose of this suit that they did not.

Shortly after the partition, the third of these sons, Haji Hassan, established a trading firm on his own account. Later on, but at what exact time it is unnecessary to fix, his younger brother Hammed (the fourth son) worked in the firm established by the elder brother. Hammed brought no capital into the business, which was carried on exclusively with the property inherited or acquired by the elder brother through his own exertions.

Whether there were any clearly understood terms on which Hammed joined his brother's business, does not appear. There is, however, one circumstance to which great weight must be given; the terms in which several years after the two brothers had been working together in the firm the relationship between them is referred to by the elder with the unequivocal concurrence of the younger in Exhibit XVI. This document has been called by the learned District Judge a Will, and though its operation is not expressly made to depend upon the death of the executant, it has some of the features of a Will.

The genuineness of Exhibit XVI was attacked before us mainly on three grounds: (1) that it is not shown to have been produced on any occasion previous to this suit, though there have been disputes amongst the members of the family, notably in connection with the mutation of names on the deaths of Dodda Moidin, Dodda Hassan and Saana Hassan, when the document may well be expected to have been relied upon had it then existed; (2) that admittedly it was never given effect to; and (3) that by a comparison of signatures on Exhibit XVI with the signatures in Exhibits V, VII, VIII and XII, suspicion is cast on the former. Having given all weight to these objections, I see no reason to doubt that Exhibit XVI is genuine. That was the conclusion at which the learned Judge seems to have arrived. A comparison of the signatures seems to me to strengthen that conclusion.

Exhibit XVI is dated the 3rd September 1845. It purports to be executed by Haji Hassan, when he was about to start on a pilgrimage to Mecca. He refers to the partition of 1818 and states that the property that then came to his share (under Exhibit XIV) had been added to by his own self-exertions. He also mentions some other properties. The properties referred to in it, are altogether valued as equivalent of about Rs. 23,000. He then states: "As my younger brother Hammed Saheb has been with me till now, doing such acts as I directed him to do, and as he should remain when I start for Mecca, he shall get" one-eighth of the property. At the bottom of Exhibit XVI, it is stated that it is written "in the hand of Hammed Saheb with his own consent."

It has been the case of both parties that on its true construction, Exhibit XVI must be taken to have been executed in contemplation of the probability that Haji Hassan would not come back to take charge of the properties or the business and that, in any event, the younger brother would survive the elder. Neither of those expectations was realised. Haji Hassan did come back two or three years after he left, apparently before 1848; the accounts of 1848-49 refer to him. He lived till 1870—for 25 years after Exhibit XVI had been executed. His younger brother, Hammed, predeceased him by four years, dying in 1866.

Before dealing with the significance of Exhibit XVI, I shall conclude my reference to the history of the family. After the death of Haji Hassan, the members of both branches lived amicably, just as they would have done if they had been members of a joint and undivided Hindu family. The family group came in time to have three living houses at Souda in South Canara, where the firm was carrying on business; but the home of the family (in the words of the District Judge) remained in Manki in North Canara, from where they originally came. The firm (as I have already stated) was managed (1) by Haji Hassan and Hammed; (2) after the death of Haji Hassan, the management of the firm seems to have been with Dodda Moidin, the son of Haji Hassan, at least the whole of the properties were transferred to his name; (3) after the death of Dodda Moidin, Abdul Rajack, the eldest son of Hammed and son-in-law of Haji Hassan, seems to have been in management; (4) thereafter, there appears to have been two managers (i) Dodda Hassan, the eldest paternal grandson of Haji Hassan and (ii) Sanna Hassan, the second son of Hammed and father-in-law of Dodda Hassan.

As to the manner in which the accounts stood: I. They stood solely in the name of Haji Hassan till 1870 II. Between 1871 and 1882, they stood jointly in the names of Dodda Moidin and Abdul Rajack. III. There seems to be no evidence as to the names in which the accounts stood between 1883 and 1897 (the learned Judge's remarks on page 37, lines 13—16, were admitted before us to be erroneous). IV. From 1897 to 1901, they stood in the name of the 9th defendant, Hussain Sahib, eldest male descendant of Haji Hassan, with the names of Muhammad Shiddik and Ali Sahib (who are the sons of Abdul Rajack, but who are also the maternal grandsons of Haji Hassan). V. From 1901, the name of the 11th defendant, a brother of the 9th defendant, is also inserted.

I shall have to refer in detail at a later stage to the evidence showing the feelings between the two branches of the family in 1897, when Dodda Hassan died leaving no sons but only a widow and daughter as his heirs. At present, I need not allude to them, as Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for the appellants conceded that the members of the younger branch were entitled to some share in the property in question, and because there were admissions to that effect binding upon his clients.

The question remains, in which properties the plaintiffs are entitled to share and to what share they are entitled. In connection with this question, I will refer first to Exhibit XVI which in my opinion is clear evidence that the property mentioned in it belonged at its date to Haji Hassan alone. As it was not given effect to, and as Haji Hassan survived Hammed, it might have been argued that it became ineffective and Hammed or his heirs acquired no interest in the said property by reason of Exhibit XVI [Cf. Oomuttoonnissa Beebee v. Areefoonnissa Beebee (4)]. It was, however, conceded by the contesting defendants that Hammed and his heirs ought to be given one-eighth of the property mentioned in Exhibit XVI.

I have already pointed out that Exhibit XVI refers specifically to identified properties, and that it is not intended to cover future acquisitions.

The property acquired by or on behalf of Haji Hassan between 1845 and 1870—for three years exclusively by the labours of Hammed, from 1848 to 1866 jointly by the two brothers, and for the last four years, exclusively by Haji Hassan—may be governed by one of three sets of considerations:—

(1) On the basis, that the said property must belong exclusively to Haji Hassan and his heirs, because Exhibit XVI, however favourably it is construed, cannot be taken to affect future acquisitions: even to the extent to which it goes, it was not given effect to by Haji Hassan, though he survived Hammed; or

(2) On the basis that Hammed must be given one-eighth share in the said property on the analogy of the provisions of Exhibit XVI as quantum meruit for his work in the firm; or

(3) On the basis that Hammed must be taken to have acquired a one-eighth share in the property mentioned in Exhibit XVI in 1845, that he ranked as a partner after that date and that as such under section 253 (2) of the Indian Contract Act, he became entitled to share equally in the profits of the partnership business after 1845.

The following considerations must, it seems to me, be borne in mind in arriving at a conclusion on this point:—

(1) Hammed brought no initial property to the firm which was established by his elder brother, Haji Hassan. It is true that Hammed may have had some property of his own; Exhibit XIV gives particulars of what was given to him in the partition of 1818. But the properties mentioned in Exhibit XVI are, it is clear, exclusively Haji Hassan's. It was clearly for the heirs of Hammed to trace out and show the origin of property which, as it is now suggested, belonged to Hammed and was at some time or other thrown in by him into the assets of Haji Hassan. It seems to me much more likely that, as is usual amongst Muslim families, Hammed kept his own funds separate. Exhibit XVI certainly does not give countenance to the unusual course having been followed, of the elder brother having taken the comparatively small property of his younger brother into his flourishing firm, without there being any necessity for it. The accounts would have shown if this had been done and mention would in all probability have been made of it in Exhibit XVI.

2. Hammed worked with his brother as a dependent. No mention is made of his having brought any capital to the firm, or of his having been made a partner.

3. In 1845, the entire property was, with Hammed's consent, described as Haji Hassan's and only a one-eighth share therein is allotted to him as a favour by his elder brother.

4. Hammed does not seem to be made a partner of his elder brother by the terms of Exhibit XVI; it is merely provided that he shall get a part of the property in the same way in which the wife would get a similar part.

5. Hammed is spoken of as a dependent and, though it is contemplated that the firm would in future, i.e., after Haji Hassan's death or retirement, belong to the son of Haji Hassan, the nephew of Hammed, yet the uncle is referred to as the manager of his nephew's firm, and not as a partner in that firm. It would rarely happen that a younger brother in a Muslim family should be spoken of as a dependent of his elder brother, though they are both partners. It is much more difficult to think that the uncle should, in similar circumstances, be referred to in this depreciatory manner.

6. The origin of the properties being traced to Haji Hassan, it is for Hammed's heirs to prove the means by which a portion of the property became transferred to themselves. Joint acquisition may no doubt give a title to co-ownership on grounds similar to those on which the law as to partnership is based. But the terms of Exhibit XVI do not indicate a joint acquisition in such a sense as to require an equal division of the property acquired. On the other hand, I must concede that there is no indication that the firm as a going concern was considered as any great asset in itself, and this fact might render it easier to bring in the operation of section 253 (2); for, where the good-will of the firm is deemed to be the main instrument of acquisition, it might be that the proportion in which the assets of the firm are owned, would have to be considered the main factor in determining the proportion in which the properties acquired, were to be shared, rather than the fact of joint exertion; consequently, where a person has a proportionately small share in the assets of such a firm, the good-will of which is the main instrument of acquisition, there is less reason (in the absence of clear evidence) to presume that the main instrument of acquisition is owned in unequal proportions.

(7) Exhibit XVI does not refer to an immediate transfer of the one-eighth share of the property to Hammed. It is in the nature of directions that such a transfer should take place. It is sufficiently straining the effect of Exhibit XVI to say that Hammed's heirs are now entitled to get one-eighth of the property because Haji Hassan intended him to get as much; but it cannot, it seems to me, be construed to mean that the one-eighth had become Hammed's from its date. Hammed is mentioned in it as only one of the several persons entitled to share and that which he can claim under it, the widow and the rest can also claim.

(8) Exhibit XVI clearly shows that whatever may have been the terms on which Hammed worked in the firm of his brother, they were not partners; and that in 1845, Haji Hassan, with the consent of Hammed, laid down that the interests of Hammed in the property referred to in Exhibit XVI, should amount to a one-eighth share of that property, neither more nor less. No reference is made in Exhibit XVI to future earnings and acquisitions; and in accordance with its terms, the said share of the properties then in existence, was to form the consideration also for Hammed's continuing to work in the firm after Haji Hassan left for Mecca.

(9) The conduct of the two brothers and of the members of the family seems to me to have been such as would be expected from brothers between whom the business relations referred to in Exhibit XVI were continued, and the treatment of the younger brother by his elder together with their conduct towards the other members of the family, do not appear to me to require the inference that the younger brother was given the higher status of partner. My consideration of the question is not unaffected by the fear that to hold otherwise would in one sense penalise cordial and considerate relations between brothers. It would imply that if two brothers trade or otherwise work together, one of whom alone contributes the capital, he may not permit the fact of their being brothers to colour the terms upon which they associate in their work; any treatment different from that which would be expected from strangers, would in that case involve a division of the acquisitions between the two brothers, which but for such treatment would be the property of one alone.

On a consideration of all this, I am clearly of opinion that the two brothers were not partners on equal terms, but that Haji Hassan was the sole owner of the firm and that the proper remuneration to be paid to Hammed for his work was in 1845 fixed upon between them at one-eighth of the assets then existing; but that he was not entitled to rank as a partner from 1845, nor on that basis to claim half of the future acquisitions.

I feel, however, much greater difficulty in deciding whether he ought not to continue receiving one-eighth of the acquisitions between 1845 and 1870. I have arrived at the conclusion that he ought not, for reasons which I have already indicated, to which I may add that (1) however proper it might now appear that Haji Hassan should have provided for a division of the future acquisitions, as a matter of fact he did not so provide, and (2) that Hammed and his family were, it would appear, living with Haji Hassan, who was bearing their expenses.

Hence after very careful consideration, it seems to me that the most proper view of the matter would be to hold that Exhibit XVI should be given effect to, but as on the death of Haji Hassan, so that (1) as conceded by the defendants, Hammed should have one-eighth of the properties mentioned in Exhibit XVI and (2) the properties acquired between 1845 and 1870 should be exclusively Haji Hassan's and his heirs.'

In this connection, our attention has been drawn to the fact that three of the properties are shown to have been purchased in the name of Hammed. Exhibits XVIII, XIX and XX refer to them. They are dated 1844, 1849 and 1848, respectively. The considerations for them were Rs. 280, Rs. 850 and Rs. 196. These properties were transferred to "Hammed Sahib, younger brother of Hassan Saib, of Souda" and to "Savada Hassan Sahib's brother, Hammed Sahib," and they were in 1866 (on the death of Hammed) transferred to the name of Dodda Moidin, the son of Haji Hassan. It seems to me that these facts indicate that the properties must be taken to have been acquired on behalf of Haji Hassan. They are not to be considered Hammed's separate property.

The next question, therefore, is as regards the ownership of the property acquired after 1870.

As I have already said, Hammed Sahib's heirs became entitled on the death of Haji Hassan to one-eighth of the property mentioned in Exhibit XVI. The heirs of Haji Hassan and Hammed, therefore, became co-owners of the property in the proportion of seven-eighths to one-eighth. It seems to me that the evidence discussed by the learned District Judge in detail, on the basis of which he has arrived at the finding that the family consisting of the plaintiff and defendants is joint and undivided, is sufficient to show that the two groups of heirs, namely, those of Haji Hassan and Hammed were jointly entitled to the property on their death.

I have mentioned in an earlier part of the judgment the disputes between the elder and younger branches of the family. The documents bearing on this point, may all be grouped together as arising from the proceedings relating to the mutation of names on the deaths of Dodda Moidin, Dodda Hassan (son and grandson of Haji Hassan) and of Sanna Hassan (son of Hammed). They establish in the first place, what is no doubt contested in some of the written statements but what, as I have already said, was not denied before us, that the plaintiff is entitled as of right to some share in the property which is the subject-matter of the suit and that the allowances paid for maintenance and otherwise were not merely in the nature of charitable allowances. I shall consider them now in some detail.

(1) The genealogy, Exhibit D, was accepted by the members of both branches, who agree in representing themselves as belonging "to an undivided family (aribaktha kutumba)." This description would, if it is interpreted in its strict sense, exclude the females mentioned in the genealogy from any share in the family property. It is clear that their inclusion, in a family governed by the Hindu co-parcenary law, is meaningless, and in any case, such inexactness in referring to the status of the family and of the rights of the members constituting it, cannot prevail against the clear statement of all parties that the law of succession governing them is Mahamadan Law, according to which the females must be given their rights of inheritance. At the same time, these expressions do amount to an admission that all the males mentioned in the genealogy have an interest in the immoveable property; that such property was held in common; and that the fact that the pattah relating to it stood in the name of Haji Hassan who belonged to the elder branch of the family, was not considered by the members of that branch itself as assertive or indicative of the sole right of that branch in the properties concerned.

(2) In Exhibit E1 (September 1897), the 9th defendant, a member of the elder branch, says:—

"as shown in the annexed genealogical tree, we are all heirs, and there are heirs of the second branch, and being members of an undivided family not only the management of the lands but all the remaining managements are conducted jointly as a whole as family concern. — The kathi standing in the name of my father (Dodda Moidin) had been, after his death, transferred to the name of the eldest son of the deceased. As I alone am, after him, the senior member and as there remains property belonging to an undivided family, I alone am the hukdar for kathi..... Therefore as had been done from the time of our ancestors out of respectability, kathi should be entered in my name so as to be convenient to conduct all our proceedings.".....

(3) In Exhibit E2, dated 4th October 1897, Souda Hassan, the 9th defendant says:—

as given in the genealogy herewith attached, the deceased has got near heirs. And there are heirs of branch two. The heirs of both the said branches are undivided.....Alli Sahib rallat [i.e., the son (of Abdul Rajack) the 15th defendant], being in Souda, manages the shop.....In the undivided family of the two branches and in our household, my father looked after the management till his death and all the members of the family (i.e., both branches) are supplied with necessities from our household."

(4) Again when the patta for the five properties in Kundapur taluk, was transferred to the name of the 8th defendant who was the paternal grand-daughter of Hammed Sahib, but married to Dodda Moidin, the paternal grandson of Haji Hassan and the elder brother of the 9th defendant, the 9th defendant put in an appeal petition, Exhibit F, in December 1897 in which he said:—

"That in consideration of personal status and property qualification, appellant has been appointed a member of Taluk Board and in deference to personal status of appellant even the elderly members, sons of Abdul Rajack, have given their consent to the kudthala being changed in the name of the appellant for the reason that the said properties both in Honnavar and Cundapoor Taluks, were acquired by appellant's grandfather, Haji Hassan Saiba, and appellant's father, Moidin Saiba." "That the said Sanna Moidin Saiba, though the eldest male member in the family, has been abandoned by other members of the family in his endeavours to secure the kudthala in his own name, because, he is not a well-wisher of the family and much less qualified to be kudthaladar and his consent to have the kudthala in the name of respondent is purely an act of vengeance and resentment, tending to the destruction of family properties."

Then followed a mediation. In the result out of five properties paying a total assessment of Rs. 451-8-10, properties bearing an assessment of Rs. 173-2-0 were agreed to be transferred to the 9th defendant's name and the remaining properties, bearing an assessment of Rs. 278-6-10, were agreed to be transferred to the 15th defendant's brother's name. The order Exhibit F2 was passed accordingly in October 1898.

(5) The 8th defendant herself in Exhibits E5 and E9 seems to admit that the 9th defendant has a "right to manage" even in the very application by which she desires that the patta should be transferred to her name. But as the parties are governed by Muhammadan Law, the 8th defendant could not be under the necessity of having the properties to which she was entitled by inheritance managed by the 9th defendant. The reference to management by the 8th defendant and the terms in which the reference is made, throw light on the mode of life adopted by the parties.

(5) Finally, the abstinence on the part of the 9th defendant to assert any superior title in the ownership of the properties as against the members of the junior branch is specially noteworthy.

On a consideration of all the circumstances, my conclusion with reference to the properties acquired by the firm after 1870 is that they must be taken to have been acquired by the joint labours of the heirs of both the brothers. It seems to me, therefore, that section 253, clause (2), of the Indian Contract Act is applicable, and that the said acquisitions must be divided equally between the elder and the younger branches.

I must state here that it is conceded that at least one-eighth should be given to the heirs of Hammed Sahib. Moreover, the learned Pleaders for all the parties before us stated on behalf of their clients that none of them desired to claim anything either on their own behalf or on behalf of their ancestors by way of remuneration for conducting the affairs of the partnership firm originally established by Haji Hassan, and that all were agreed that they would claim only on the basis of inheritance from their ancestors and on the basis that in all other respects, the rights of all the parties concerned, stood on the same footing. If my view of the case is correct, this concession was very properly and wisely made. Otherwise it might have become necessary to determine:—

Who were entitled to share the acquisitions of property of the firm from time to time, after the death of Haji Hassan until the date of the suit

(a) as partners under section 253 (2) of the Indian Contract Act,

HUSSAIN SAIB V. HASSAN SAIB.

(b) as having been admitted partners under section 247,

(c) as representatives of a deceased partner under section 241,

(d) as lenders under section 240, and

(e) as annuitants or receivers of portions of the profits under section 243.

The determination of these questions would have required a detailed examination of complicated accounts, and would probably have resulted in greater delay and expense than gain to any of the parties.

On the conclusions of fact at which I have arrived, and on the waiver by the parties of any claims they might have had on basis other than that of inheritance, it seems to me that the shares of the various members of the family will have to be determined in accordance with the Muhammadan Law of inheritance, in a mode similar to that adopted by the learned District Judge in paragraph 24 of his judgment. Owing to the admissions to which I have referred, the parties will be entitled to a proportionate share of all the properties acquired on behalf of the family group up to the time of the suit, as the share of Hammed in the properties by the aid of which acquisition after 1870 has been made has continued to remain in the firm.

I might have concluded my judgment here; but owing to the fact that my learned brother and I take different views, I must consider in the first instance the method of decision adopted by the learned District Judge and state in some detail my reasons for differing from him and my learned brother.

The learned District Judge has considered on the evidence whether the family of which the plaintiff and defendants formed members was a "joint family," and after a very careful examination of the evidence, he has answered that question in the affirmative. With great respect, however, it seems to me that this is an erroneous basis. In speaking of parties governed by the Muhammadan Law of succession, the expression "joint family" presumably refers to a group of persons belonging originally to one family, and living together without having partitioned such property as they have inherited from some common ancestor. Their continuing so to live does not make their status different from what it would have been, had they not done so. Nor does the fact that they have not partitioned the property in any way, affect their rights therein, or the legal incidents applicable to the property.

No person can, by birth, derive an interest in the property belonging to his father during the latter's life-time. The members of the group of persons so living together (whether or not they are collectively styled a joint family) do not form any legal unit: they are not necessarily heirs of one another; property acquired by one of them does not necessarily form the property of the whole group. The group as constituted at any particular moment, is not the legal representative, or the continuous successor in law, of the persons who constituted the group in a previous generation. The result of this is, that it cannot be said that all the property which at any time in the past belonged to the group as a whole, continues to belong to the persons now included, whether arbitrarily or according to agnatic descent, in the group. The property may have devolved upon some members of the group to the exclusion of others, and may have partly devolved on strangers to the group. Strangers not forming members of the group, may be interested as heirs (even by marriage) of those who form the group, or be entitled to demand their share in the property possessed by the group. Hence, to hold that a person forms a member of such a group, does not necessarily imply that he has any share in all the property possessed by each of the other members, or kept in the possession of some person as the manager on behalf of all the group, whether such possession is held at their request, or with their consent, or merely with their acquiescence.

The question elaborately discussed by the learned Judge, whether or not the various members of the family considered themselves joint, and whether the plaintiff has been treated as a member of a joint family, may, no doubt, be important for the purpose of deciding whether the defendants have any property in their possession in which the plaintiff is entitled to share by inheritance or otherwise, and whether the plaintiff's rights are prevented from being barred by limitation. For, the fact that the plaintiff has been receiving maintenance and other allowances from the defendants till within a recent date of the suit, is evidence of the fact that the defendants have been admitting the existence, in their hands, of the property in which the plaintiff is interested. Before us, however, the plaintiff's right to some share in the property held by the contesting defendants, has not been questioned, and it has been conceded that his right is not barred except with reference to some particular classes of contentions to which I need not now allude, though both these questions were raised in the lower Court.

The view taken by the learned District Judge and accepted by my learned brother is that because there is a good deal of evidence pointing to the conclusion that the parties have considered themselves to be, and acted as though they were, members of an undivided Hindu family, therefore their rights must be similar to those of the members of a joint undivided Hindu family. I regret that I am unable to accept this conclusion. It is the case of neither party that the Hindu Law governs their property. It is expressly stated in the plaint as well as in the written statements of most of the defendants that Muhammadan Law governs them. In these circumstances, it seems to me difficult to see how the Hindu Law can be applicable. The Hindu Law of joint family property is also difficult to be applied on general grounds for two reasons:—

In a Mussalman family, daughters, wives and mothers become entitled to shares in the properties and not merely to maintenance. When a childless widow becomes entitled to a share in the property, her estate would entirely go out of the ownership of the family group, and after her death, her heirs would be her parents, or her sisters and brothers, or even remoter relations.

Apart from this difficulty, however, and even if we had only Hammed and Haji Hassan to consider, I am unable to understand, when once it is conclusively shown that certain properties belong to only one of them, how it is possible for the other to acquire a share of it unless it is by means of transfer (with or without consideration) or devolution as heir. Hammed was not the heir of Haji Hassan and, therefore, the only way in which he could become entitled to a share in the property of his brother, would be by transfer in his life-time or bequest. There never has been any suggestion that Haji Hassan made a gift of half his property to Hammed.

My remarks do not refer of course to the question whether a property jointly acquired by the exertions of two persons, should not from the very start belong to them both jointly. I am not dealing with property so acquired, but with property such as is referred to in Exhibit XVI, which is shown to have been at the start the property of Haji Hassan alone.

I do not understand how in Muhammadan Law the mere fact that one person allows another to live with him and treats him as though he were co-owner with himself of property which is shown initially to belong to him alone, can make the other a co-owner. Such circumstances may raise a presumption of co-ownership when the origin and ownership of the property is not traced and when it is not known whether one is the owner or the other. But how can these circumstances avail to transfer the ownership, or to convert sole into joint ownership?

The presumption arising in Hindu Law from such facts as I have alluded to, is based, it seems to me, on incidents of the law which cannot be imported into Muhammadan Law. If two Hindu brothers after partition again live together, and throw their property together, the property may no doubt acquire new incidents in Hindu Law. From the fact of joint living, it may be inferred that the brothers had re-united and intended to hold property with rights of survivorship, etc. But how can a similar conclusion be drawn with reference to Mussalmans? Even if they were to throw together their property, each would, in the eye of the law, be entitled to his one half. If they have children, one cannot be the heir of the others; and the incident of survivor-ship cannot be introduced in the ownership of the property.

Hence it seems to me to be difficult to conceive by what process Hammed or his heirs can have acquired half a share in the property which is shown to have been Haji Hassan's sole property, as distinguished from property which was acquired by the joint exertions of Haji Hassan and Hammed or their heirs with the aid of joint property.

It seems to me with great respect that on the principles suggested by my learned brother, though it is admitted that Muhammadan Law governs the parties, in the same breath with which that admission is made the Hindu Law is in fact applied; and the reason that is alleged is that Haji Hassan and Hammed lived like members of a Hindu joint family. But in the first place, the mode of living cannot affect the law to which they are subject, and secondly the mode of life does not seem to me to be peculiarly Hindu, as I do not see how it differs from the mode in which Muslim brothers would live together, except that their heirs died without partitioning their estates. Such a state of circumstances is contemplated in the Fatawa Alamgiri, Cf. Baillie's Digest, Book XI, Chapter XI. Nor am I able to appreciate how there can be any estoppel. If I am right in taking Exhibit XVI as evidence that the property mentioned in it was Haji Hassan's, Hammed certainly knew that fact. Can Hammed then turn round and say to his brother, "True, this property was yours and I knew as well as you or any one else that I had no right over it, but you have been such a kind brother to me and been treating me as though I were co-owner of the property with you. Now, therefore, you are estopped from denying that I am entitled to half of the property." If this is the law, hospitality and kindness are virtues reserved to those who are willing to give away a moiety of their property to every guest whom they ask to make himself at home in their houses. As we are dealing with Muhammadan Law, it would not be merely brothers who would be able to claim this advantageous result from hospitality. It would be open to every stranger.

I now come to deal with the question how, when the parties are governed by Muhammadan Law and have been living together without partitioning their property, the interest of each member must in my opinion be determined. In doing so, it seems to me that the following considerations have to be borne in mind: (1) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to any of the properties which are the subject of the suit by (a) inheritance, or (b) by acquisition, because the properties in the hands of the defendants were acquired by the exertions either of the plaintiff alone or of the plaintiff and the defendants; (2) whether the rights arising under these two heads, have to be diminished to the extent of any advances or payments that have to be debited to him. For, in Muhammadan Law co-owners of property, notwithstanding that they live together, would be expected to pay for their own maintenance, and other expense out of their own shares in the property held in co-ownership. This effect can, of course, be negatived by agreement and the existence of such an agreement may be presumed from the conduct of the parties and their mode of life in any particular case. It is conceded before us that in the present case such an agreement may be presumed.

Before I deal with joint acquisitions, I must distinguish acquisitions made exclusively by the exertions of any individual member which would ordinarily be his own property. The fact that the property in the hands of a person belonging to the group is obtained by inheritance and would under the Mitakshara Law be styled ancestral property, does not by itself fix with any special character fresh property acquired with the assistance of such "ancestral" property. Such fresh acquisitions do not of necessity belong to the group described as the joint family. If they belong to the group, it is only by reason of some such causes as I am going to mention. It is on this ground that it seems to me that the property acquired prior to 1870, must be considered to be Haji Hassan's, with merely a claim on the part of Hammed or his heirs to be given some remuneration for having assisted in the acquisition, a claim, which owing to the existence of Exhibit XVI and the concession of the defendants, is taken by me as amounting to one-eighth of the properties mentioned in Exhibit XVI. The question to which I have just alluded, may also arise in connection with properties claimed to have been acquired separately by the 11th and 22nd defendants amongst others.

Distinct from such separate acquisitions, are acquisitions made by the members of the family working together (e.g., by carrying on a joint trade) with property of which they are co-owners: such co-ownership may arise from the property having been inherited from a common ancestor, or from the fact that the parties are the legal representatives of those who were in the past partners in a firm. Acquisitions by co-owners, made with the assistance of property held in co-ownership, it seems hardly necessary to say, themselves become property held in co-ownership. It may also be that contribution to the funds necessary for making the acquisition possible was on the implied condition that the persons so contributing were to share in the fruits, even though they may not have actively or otherwise assisted in making the acquisitions. Such a contract may be implied from the conduct of the parties and their mode of life may supply evidence of such conduct. For, though no person can claim to be entitled as of right to carry on a business carried on by his father in partnership with other persons (in the same way as in a joint family or ancestral firm amongst Hindus governed by the Mitakshara Law), yet where a number of persons are living together united by ties of kinship and where the persons so living together, depend for their livelihood upon the profits of the business carried on by them or some of them, the relationship of partners can hardly be prevented from arising. Owing to the statements made to us by the learned Pleaders in Court, I have assumed that the parties in the present case admitted the existence of such implied contracts.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for the appellants strongly urged that no question of partnership can arise in the present case, the pleadings being on the footing of co-ownership and not of partnership. But the origin of partnership has itself been explained in Roman Law to be the "Consortium" of co-heirs. The exposition of this class of partnership in Roman Law is so suggestive that it may be here referred to with advantage.

Thus I find that Professor Roby, in his Treatise on Private Roman Law, Volume II, pages 127, 128, after defining "a partnership" as "a contract whereby two or more persons agree to work together for common profit, or to acquire and hold property in common, sharing the gains and the losses," continues: they "may combine only for one particular piece of business, or to carry on a continuous trade or enterprise, or they may even agree to put all they have, into a common stock and share each other's fortunes of whatever kind." He adds in a foot-note:—

"It is probable that this thoroughgoing partnership sprang from the position of brothers and sisters living together as joint heirs to their father. Consortes appears to have this special application. Gellius (i. 9) speaking of the Pythagoreans says, quod quisque familiæ, pecuniæ, habebat, in medium debat, et coibatur zocietas inseparabilis, tamquam illud fuit anticum consortium, quod jure atque verbo Romano appellabatur 'Eroto non Cito' (erctum non-cito)"

"Where there was no summons to divide the inheritance." Then Professor Roby's text continues:—

"In the absence of any wider intentions clearly shown, the partnership will be taken to relate only to business matters and to the gain and loss thence arising, in which case inheritances, legacies, gifts will be outside the contract."

This illustrates, first, that where a group of persons belonging to a family governed by Muhammadan Law, work together for the purpose of earning their livelihood and acquiring properties, the transition leading up to the formation of such a thoroughgoing partnership is extremely easy, and secondly, it indicates limitations on the scope of the partnership and points out a means for limiting the assets and liabilities of the firm, even in regard to the rights of members directly participating in the labours of carrying on the firm, or holding possession of its assets or profits or adding to its liabilities.

Here again, there is a certain analogy with the law governing a Hindu family firm, but it seems to me that the analogy is not complete. It is true that Hindu family firms are the partnerships which in India have the closest resemblance to such "thoroughgoing partnerships" amongst Mussalmans as we have to deal with in the present case. Their analogy is alluring, because the Hindu Law furnishes a simple method of determining the rights of the parties: under it the whole group continues to be a single legal entity making it unnecessary to trace out the legal results on the decease of each ancestor of the claimant. For reasons, however, which I shall state, it seems to me that this easy process is not available unless the parties are willing (as they are in the present case) to have each one of themselves treated as though he or she were a partner with the right to share in the profits of the firm (or future acquisitions) in the proportion of his or her interest in the assets of the firm, irrespective of sections 240, 241, 243, 247 and 253 (2) of the Indian Contract Act.

The learned District Judge has referred to Khatija v. Ismail (2) in the beginning of his judgment in the following terms:—

"The parties are Navayats the customs of which race are recorded in Khatija v. Ismail (2). Ordinarily Navayats follow the joint family system of the Hindus but conform to the Muhammadan Law in succession. The evidence in this case shows that these parties do the same and there is absolutely nothing to prove otherwise. I, therefore, find that they follow this custom."

The result of the decision in Khatija v. Ismail (2) seems to me to be stated too broadly in this passage. All that is there laid down is that amongst the Navayats "though the devolution and distribution of the property were regulated by the rules of Muhammadan Law, the Hindu system of managing joint family property by a male co-parcener was in vogue."

It need hardly be pointed out that the fact that a particular custom is relied upon and held by the Court to have been proved in one case, does not empower the Court to take judicial notice of it in another case; judicial notice may be taken only of a custom that has been repeatedly proved. In this case, no special custom was pleaded; nor is any general custom referred to in Khatija v. Ismail (2). But the word 'custom' frequently invites a confusion of ideas. In its legal sense, custom must of necessity connote only such rules of conduct as affect rights and liabilities. Evidence of the peculiar ways of living adopted by any class of persons may have to be adduced for an elucidation of the facts existing in any particular case. But this does not make those ways of living or observances customary rules of law. There may, however, be sufficient evidence in the present case for holding that the particular family concerned, has adopted a way of living which is similar to that adopted by members of a joint Hindu family. But what is far more important is that the parties are agreed that their rights are to be governed by Muhammadan Law and that they have not adopted the Hindu Law of succession.

Is there any reason why the assets of the firm originally established by Haji Hassan and carried on by the ancestors of the plaintiff and the defendants, in which members of these branches have acted as partners or managers, should be governed by the law applicable to a Hindu joint family or ancestral firm governed by the Mitakshara Law? In order that this question may be answered, I must refer to rules governing such Hindu firms which may be relevant to the questions involved in the present litigation, and consider the reasons why such firms are governed by what in effect must be considered to be special rules of law.

The leading case relating to a Hindu joint family firm, seems to be Ramlal Thakursidas v. Lakhmichand Muniram (5). It does not seem to have been expressly noticed in the decisions following that case that it was decided in 1861, long prior to the passing of the Indian Contract Act. The learned Judges who decided the case say:

"Being a matter of contract between Hindus, the laws and usages of Hindus must govern the decision."

The principles laid down in the leading case seem, however, to have been given effect to in later decisions in the same way as if they were unaffected by that Act. Be this as it may, it seems to me that if the provisions of the Indian Contract Act were applied to the case of a joint family firm governed by the Hindu Law, the same result may be arrived at,

at least in the great majority of the cases, as that to which the decisions lead us. The most important decisions seem to me to be reconcilable with the view that the Indian Contract Act applies to a Hindu family firm, but that the incidents of the Act are affected by the peculiar doctrines of the joint Hindu family, which doctrines are incorporated in the law of Hindu ancestral firms, just in the same way as the provisions contained in the articles of partnership relating to any particular firm may be incorporated. The Indian Contract Act in this view governs Hindu family firms as much as any other firm; but the incidents of a Hindu joint family firm are different from those of a firm not subject to the Hindu joint family law, just as, under the Act, a firm having one set of articles of partnership, will have different incidents from a firm having another set of articles. Thus, for instance, section 241 of the Act lays down that "a contract to the contrary" may prevent a particular result following. That same result is prevented from following in the case of a Hindu joint family firm by the fact that by the operation of the Hindu Law, the sons of a father become partners with him in his life-time by birth, and may continue to be partners after his death. If, on his death, they continue to carry on the business, the same results follow as though they had agreed to continue the firm as such partners. See Samalbai Nathubhai v. Someshwar (6). Similarly, the contract referred to in section 245, must have reference to the law governing the parties; and under section 247, a minor may be admitted by operation of the law to the benefits of the partnership, and may have his share in the property of the firm, but be free from personal liability for any obligations of the firm. See Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (7).

Thus I take the decisions relating to Hindu joint family firms to show that the Indian Contract Act lays down that the relations between the members of the firm must be presumed to be to a certain effect, in the absence of a contract to the contrary; that the contract to the contrary may be an implied contract; that such an implied contract may be presumed from the mode of life resulting from the general personal law of the parties, especially when not presuming such an implied contract, would bring about inconsistencies, and results unexpected by the parties themselves.

If this is so, then in any event, the Indian Contract Act must be looked to primarily for determining the incidents of the firm established by Haji Hassan, even though the mode of life adopted by the members of the family was that prevalent amongst members of a joint Hindu family. That fact, however, must be brought to bear upon the rules contained in the Indian Contract Act, and must not be made a medium for conducting all the incidents of a Hindu family firm into the present case. Thus the law of survivorship among co-parceners by which sons acquire an interest in the ancestral property of their father during the life-time of the father, does not find a place in Muhammadan Law; and widows and daughters take definite fractions in the estates of the deceased, and the property represented by those fractions, is not liable to be diminished by any subsequent conduct of the partners of the firm. The right of such ladies may under certain circumstances differ from the rights of those male members who assist in the business, and in the acquisition of property, because the latter would under the Indian Contract Act be entitled to be considered partners in regard to the acquisitions made by efforts in which they have joined, whereas females and such males as have not contributed their efforts in acquiring new properties, would not be partners.

Again, in the case of an ancestral firm whose members are governed by Muhammadan Law, one of the members may die leaving no heirs within the group of persons living together and working in the ancestral firm. His heirs, in the absence of descendants, may be collaterals who have had no dealings with the firm, or with the family group in which the deceased was included. In such a case the share of the deceased partner would nonetheless devolve upon the strangers, and would be subject to the provisions of section 241 of the Indian Contract Act,

(6) 5 B. 35.

HUSSAIN SAIB V. HASSAN SAIB.

whereas in the case of a Hindu joint co-parcenary property (whether or not consisting of a family firm), on the death of any of the members, his estate must necessarily devolve upon persons within the co-parcenary itself. Where one of the partners dies, the firm would ordinarily be considered to be dissolved. [Indian Contract Act, section 253 (10)]. But since the firm has been continuously carried on, there must, in the eye of the law, be considered to have been, on the death of each partner, a fresh contract, express or implied, to continue the firm. On the other hand, it does not follow that the heirs of the deceased partner should become partners in the firm by the very fact of such continuance of the firm, or by the fact that the assets of the firm include the share therein of the deceased partner which by his death has devolved on such heirs. The reason why the sons of a partner in a Hindu ancestral firm are on the death of their father taken to be partners in the firm, is that the sons are co-sharers and partners with their father in his life-time, that in fact, though as between the father and the other members of the firm, the father was one unit, that unit consists of himself and his sons who are co-parceners with him in the family property. Samalbai Nathubhai v. Someshwar (6). Even in regard to a firm governed by the Hindu joint family law, the limitations as to the liability incurred by a partner are indicated in Bishambhar Nath v. Fateh Lal (8) and Chalamayya v. Varadappa (9). The result of these two decisions seems to be the same as would have been arrived at by applying section 241 of the Indian Contract Act, though the section does not seem to have been expressly referred to and the circuitous method is followed of considering, in the first instance, persons to be partners, though they have not taken any active part in, nor had any concern with, the management of the firm directly or indirectly [See Bishambhar Nath v. Fateh Lal (8)] and then limiting the liabilities of such persons in a manner which could not be available to partners, but which would result from the application of section 241. If the liabilities of a partner are not incurred, then it would follow that the rights under section 253 (2) cannot be claimed.

In the case of Mussalmans, section 241 of the Indian Contract Act has, it seems to me, a direct operation: in their case there is "no contract to the contrary," nor does their personal law operate so as to make them partners to any extent, or otherwise to minimise the effect of section 241 on their rights.

After it is determined, who from time to time are partners in such a firm, it is possible to say how the acquisitions and additions from time to time to the property of the firm are to be divided. As I have already said, all the heirs of Haji Hassan and Hammed were interested in the assets of the partnership, but they were not necessarily partners. The rights of the two different classes of persons would have had to be determined on different bases, but for the concessions to which I have referred. The rights of those who are held to be partners, would have been subject to the rule contained in section 253 (2) of the Indian Contract Act; and those of the heirs of Haji Hassan and Hammed who would have been held to be partners in the firm would have been considered under section 241 of the Indian Contract Act to have given a loan of their portion of the property to the partnership. But these details are not necessary in the present case. I have only stated these for making my view of the case clear, and for showing that there are no inherent insurmountable difficulties in the way of applying Muhammadan Law to the assets of the firm as well as adopting the Muhammadan Law of succession.

The result seems to be, therefore, that such cases must be considered, as indeed they are, a series of suits for administration, partition, and dissolution of partnerships. The rights of the parties must be determined with reference to the Muhammadan Law of inheritance and succession, and to the law contained in the Indian Contract Act relating to acquisitions made with joint labour, or by means of property in which more persons than one are interested or with property originally jointly acquired and held in co-ownership and subsequently continued to be held and utilised for further acquisitions by the survivors of the original co-owners on an implied agreement with the heirs of the deceased co-owners.

It will be convenient to record the findings that should in my opinion be given on the issues:—

On issue (1), my answer would be, the parties are the heirs of two brothers who held certain properties in co-ownership; as such heirs, the parties are themselves co-owners of the properties originally owned by their ancestors, and properties acquired with the aid of those properties.

(2) The parties as such heirs, are entitled to share in the properties mentioned in the schedules to the plaint except in the shop of the 12th defendant.

(3) In the affirmative.

(4) In the affirmative.

(5). In the affirmative in the terms stated in my judgment.

(6) } These issues are argumentative,

(7) } and I think my judgment gives a sufficient answer. In my opinion, amongst parties governed by Muhammadan Law, there cannot be such undivided members of a joint family as to prevent their holding private property.

(8) In the affirmative.

(9) In the affirmative.

(10) Not barred.

(13) In the affirmative.

(12) } I agree with my learned brother's

(14) } remarks on the District Judge's view with reference to these two issues (see page 23 of the District Judge's judgment) and answer these two issues in the negative.

In my opinion, for the reasons which I regret I have not been able to state at less length, the case ought to be referred back to the District Judge for accounts being taken on the following basis:

(1) That Hammed Sabib was entitled to one-eighth of the properties referred to in Exhibit XVI;

(2) that seven-eighths of the said property and all other properties acquired prior to 1870, belong exclusively to Haji Hassan and his heirs;

(3) that the property acquired by the firm established by Haji Hassan after 1870 must be equally divided amongst the heirs of Haji Hassan and Hammed Sahib in accordance with Muhammadan Law.

I would make the costs of the parties come out of the estate, but with liberty to the learned District Judge to declare that any particular sets of costs were unnecessarily incurred and should be borne by the parties themselves.

On this basis, a preliminary decree for partition should, in my opinion, be made, which would be followed in due course by a final decree.

SADASIVA AYYAR, J.— As my learned brother's judgment deals with the preliminary facts and the relationship of the parties at length, I shall not repeat them. Whatever may have been the nature of the understanding between Hammed and Haji Hassan at the time when they commenced to work together, they agreed in 1845 that the interest of Hammed in the property referred to in Exhibit XVI, should amount to one-eighth share of that property. Exhibit XVI further shows that it was only if Haji Hassan failed to return from his pilgrimage that Exhibit XVI was intended to have effect.

Was the interest of Hammed in the assets of the firm that of a partner after Haji Hassan returned, that is, between 1848 and 1866, so that section 253 (2) of the Contract Act is brought into operation?

The conduct of the two brothers and of the members of the family after Haji Hassan's return in about 1848, seems to me to have been such as would be expected from brothers who consider themselves as equal partners of the business and equal co-owners of all their properties. If Haji Hassan and Hammed Sahib had been Hindu brothers, I think their conduct and the conduct of their descendants and heirs could lead to only one conclusion, namely, that they were equal partners and co-owners. In Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (3), Sir V. Bashyam Aiyanggr, J., uses the following expressions (in that case two out of five Hindu brothers carried on a business jointly):—

"It is not alleged that there was any express agreement of partnership, but that as the plaintiff regularly combined his labour with that of the 1st defendant in carrying on the contract business, an agreement of partnership should be implied between them, especially as they were related as brothers." "There being no express agreement between the brothers in regard to the contract business, the question that presents itself for consideration is whether, under the above circumstances, a contract of partnership should be implied or whether the proper inference to be drawn is that there was no legal relation between the brothers in respect of the business, but that the plaintiff regularly and systematically assisted his elder brother in carrying on the work in... expectation that his elder brother would deal with him generously if profits were realised from the business."

"In deciding this question one should of course have special regard to the social customs of the Hindus and to the fact that the plaintiff and the first defendant were brothers...that the nature of the business was such that combination of labour was more important for success than contribution of capital and that the plaintiff's association with his brother in the business for a period of nearly six years was not casual but regular and continuous."

The learned Judge refers to several other circumstances, and then says: "Under these circumstances an agreement of partnership would be implied by law," and adverting to the principles of the law of estoppel embodied in section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act which is the same as the English Law, the learned Judge held that the first defendant in that case was estopped from denying that the plaintiff was an equal co-owner or partner. In the present case, there is no doubt one circumstance against Hammed Sahib, namely, that he agreed in 1845 to take one-eighth share of those properties belonging to his brother which were in existence in 1845 when his brother started on holy pilgrimage. It does not, however, appear that Hammed had not then other properties of his own. It is further clear that Exhibit XVI which seems to have been unearthed from old forgotten records, was never acted upon, evidently because the elder brother returned in 1848 and the relations between the two brothers became still more cordial than it was before in 1845, the son of the younger brother marrying the daughter of the elder. All that appears afterwards is that the two brothers lived together as if they were members of a Hindu joint undivided family and that both equally managed the affairs of the business and conducted the transactions connected with the immoveable properties which were acquired mostly in the elder brother's name, though some properties of substantial value were also purchased in the younger brother's name. I do not forget that they were Mussalmans and not Hindus, but they were Mussalmans who belonged to a small sect called Narayats. Their customs are thus recorded in Khatija v. Ismail (2), by the late Mr. C. Gopalan Nayar, who was in his days one of the ablest members of the Subordinate Judicial Service:

"It has to be remembered that, though these people are Muhammadans by religion, they conform to Hindu customs and manners to a very great extent. They belong to a class called 'Narayats' or new comers, being the descendants of a party of Arab merchants who migrated to Bhatkal near Goa some 770 years ago and took for their wives converts from the Hindu Konkani of the place. Konkani is still the home language of these people, and it is clear from the evidence of several witnesses that, like their Konkani neighbours, they are not over-fond of division. Though...the common ancestor died in 1856, his estate was never divided among his heirs, but managed quite in the Hindu fashion by his eldest son...till his death in 1866 and since by the 1st defendant. That such management was for the benefit of all the heirs of Sayyad Mahomed Sahib (the common ancestor) is indeed clear from the admission of the parties."

The learned Judges of this Court on appeal adopted the same view, namely, that many of the incidents of the joint family system obtained by custom among the Narayats. The evidence in the present case also clearly points to the same conclusion.

My learned brother Mr. Justice Spencer had in 1913, as District Judge of Tanjore, to consider a case between the members of a Routher family in Negapatam, the Routher community, while following the Muhammadan Law of inheritance, having also adopted many of the customs of the Hindus. (See pages 96 to 100 of the printed papers in Second Appeal No. 983 of 1913). In Vella;

HUSSAIN SAIB v. HASSAN SAIB.

Mira Ravuttan v. Mira Moilin Ravuttan (10) the High Court observed :

"Although the technical rules of Hindu Law are not applicable to families of this tribe, the same presumption must arise from facts of a similar kind and the same principle must be equally held to govern cases of family partnership among Hindus and Muhammadans. The first defendant, having been managing member of the joint estate for a long series of years, must be presumed to have made these additions to the property from the joint estate, unless the contrary were shown."

In Suddurtonnessa v. Majada Khatoun (11), Markby, J., observed :—

"When a Muhammadan family adopts the customs of Hindus, it may do so subject to any modification of those customs which the members may consider desirable; and it must rest with the Judge who has to decide each particular case how far he should apply the rules of a Hindu joint family to the case of any Muhammadan joint family that comes before him."

Mr. Justice Spencer approved as District Judge the following remarks of the Subordinate Judge who tried that case which came up as Second Appeal No. 983 of 1913 to this Court:

"All the circumstances of this case show that living in the midst of a country where Hindu usages prevail, and being probably also of Hindu origin, the family has been following the Hindu usage in practice, with regard to joint living and joint enjoyment of property. In this state of things, the Courts have a discretion to apply such of the rules and presumptions of Hindu Law which are dictated by the circumstances of the case. It must accordingly be held that in this case, the plaintiff and the other sharers will be bound to contribute their shares of the debts which may be found to have been incurred for the family benefit and still outstanding. Although there is no rule of Muhammadan Law imposing such a charge, it may be fairly presumed that it is one of the incidents of the commensality that obtained in the family."

Myself and Mr. Justice Bakewell confirmed on second appeal the above decision of Mr. Justice Spencer given by him as District Judge of Tanjore.

In the present case not only did the two brothers Haji Hassan and Hammed Saheb live and conduct business amicably together between 1848 and 1865 when Hammed died, but the properties purchased in the name of either, were enjoyed by both. Exhibit XIX is a title-deed of a property purchased in the younger brother's name in 1849. Exhibits XVIII and XX are title-deeds of properties purchased in Hammed Saheb's name in 1844 and 1846. All these properties were treated as joint family properties by both brothers. [As even their Lordships of the Privy Council have used the expression "joint family" in more senses than one as pointed out by Sir C. Sankaran Nair, J., in Rama Row v. Raja of Pittapur (12)], I have ventured to use the expression joint family properties in the case of the Mussalman families without intending the expression to involve all the usual implications when applied to an undivided Hindu joint family. Upon the death of Haji Hassan in 1870, the whole property of the family, including these three properties, was registered in the name of Dodda Moideen, the son of Haji Hassan who was then the manager in Manki. The accounts of the business which had stood in the name of Haji Hassan alone, were carried on from 1871 to 1882 in the joint names of Dodda Moideen, son of the elder brother, and Abdul Rajack, the son of the younger brother. The names of other male members of the family were introduced into the accounts in subsequent years. In the genealogical tree, Exhibit B, prepared by the village officers of Honawar Taluk in 1889 and in the statement Exhibit C, taken from all the members of the family, it is implied that Haji Hassan and Hammed were co-owners, just as if they were two Hindu brothers who carried on business and acquired properties together. It is further implied that there should be a manager selected from among the members of the family consisting of the heirs of the brothers as if those heirs constituted a joint Hindu family. The trade business was carried on at Souda, while the properties were acquired mostly in Manki. (As the District Judge says:

"Numbers of documents relating to the plaint properties have now been produced to show in whose names they were purchased and it is noticeable that the man on the spot and managing the business often took the document. Exhibit R of 1891 shows that Sanna Hassan received an amount decreed to Abdul Rajack. Exhibit Q of 1893 shows that Sanna Hassan who was then conducting the trade in Souda, obtained in his own name a succession certificate to collect the trade debts. Exhibits Y, BB and CC are documents to Sanna Hassan for old debts due to the trade and for rents due to the family. Exhibit DD is a document of 1904 to the 11th defendant, then managing the trade, in renewal of an old document, Exhibit Z, of 1856 to Abdul Rajack, showing that the manager for the time being, regardless of his branch, got documents in his own name; Exhibit T is similarly a document to Alli Sahib (15th defendant), reciting a prior debt due to his father Abdul Rajack; Exhibit AA, a document to the 11th defendant, refers to his uncle Abdul Rajack as the manager at Souda; and Exhibit W similarly refers to the 15th defendant."

These Exhibits distinctly tend to show that the two branches regarded themselves as equally entitled to all the properties standing in the name of any male member in either branch. The oral evidence is also to the same effect.

In the account XXII Series (See pages 100, 107, 108, etc., of the printed papers), salutations to Ganapathi and sometimes salutation to "Sri" occur, showing that the influence of Hindu customs has permeated the community to a rather extraordinary extent. Even in the case of Hindu joint family business, the law applicable is rather complex and by no means quite settled. In Bishambhar Nath v. Fateh Lal (8), it is said in page 185:

bers of the family differs from an ordinary contractual partnership. In the case of the latter, each partner is a contracting party, all the partners holding themselves out as trading on the credit of their combined and separate funds, whereas in the case of a joint family ancestral business, there is no contract of partnership whatever between the members of the joint family. The family frequently contains amongst its members, minors who acquired their interests in the business by birth. Indeed it may be safely assumed that in most of the existing Hindu joint family trading firms, the parties, now interested in them acquired their interest by birth and not by contract. Admittedly, minor members are liable to the extent of their respective interests in the joint family property for the acts of the managers of the joint family business. But we do not think that their liability extends further. If any of the members of a joint family, happen to have separate estates, we know of no good reason why such separate estates should be held so liable."

Of course, "the legal individuality of a co-parcener is not merged in the manager, so far as the co-parcener's self-acquired or other separate property is concerned." [See Chalamayya v. Varadappa (9)]. Thus in a Hindu joint family business in which the minor agnates get interests as soon as they are born, the sections of the Contract Act relating to the dissolution of a partnership by the death of a partner and the necessity of the consent of a male member to make him liable as a partner even to the extent of the interest of his deceased father in the family partnership business for debts contracted after his father's death, are not applicable. In a Hindu joint family partnership business, it is only the male agnates that become partners (though not in the full sense of the expression "partner") liable to the extent of the funds of the partnership business. The matter is further complicated in the case of this Narayat community by the female heirs and the numerous members of each heir (whether male or female) under the Muhammadan Law, of a member of the original partnership, obtaining an interest in the partnership business on the death of each member of the family firm and of any heir of that member. But I think that till an heir or the heir of an heir repudiates all further rights and liabilities arising from the future transactions of the firm, he or she becomes and continues a partner in the sense that though he or she may not be personally liable for the debts of the firm, his or her interest in the partnership assets, continues liable till a partition is effected or till a repudiation takes place. As said in some cases, the minor who gets an interest in a Hindu partnership firm by birth, cannot be considered a partner in the sense that he becomes personally liable on his attaining majority for the debts of the firm contracted during his minority, but still he might be termed a partner in a real sense as his share and interest in the family business is liable for the debts contracted by the managing partners. In the case of Navayat families, I think that the expressions 'joint family' and 'undivided family' are used in a very loose manner as if female heirs also are members of the 'joint family' or 'undivided family.' But, so long as the family business is continued without break and though female heirs and minor heirs and heirs belonging to other families, may not be partners in the strict sense of the term, their interests in the firm's assets continue liable and the value of their interests fluctuates according to the prosperity or otherwise of the firm. I, therefore, venture to think that sections 241, 249 and 253, (clause 10) and similar sections of the Contract Act may not be inapplicable to the business carried on by a Navayat family as a family business though the principle of survivorship and that of right by birth, ought not to be imported in considering the rights and liabilities of the persons to whom the business of a Navayat family has descended as heirs. I think that in most other respects, the principles and considerations applying to the business of Hindu family firms can be made applicable. On a careful perusal of Exhibits E1 and E2 and several other documents in this case, it seems to me clear that not only males in the family but all the members (male and female) in the two branches and all the heirs and the heirs of the heirs of the original two brothers Haji Hassan and Hammed Sahib have been treated by all the interested persons as members of a "joint undivided family" that is, that as the heirs and heirs of heirs in both branches have been always recognised as jointly interested in the partnership business and in all the properties acquired forming the assets of the business. I am inclined to think that if accounts have to be taken and if only working male partners are to be treated as partners in the future business on the death of each male heir, it might become a hopeless task for even the most clear-headed Judge to find out the facts and settle the rights on anything like a satisfactory basis after the lapse of even a single generation. I believe it is not quite a secret that I am not over fond of the Mitakshara joint family system with its theories as to rights by birth, survivorship, exclusion of females from inheritance (speaking generally), discouragement of claims to separate and self-acquired properties, etc., nor am I at all for the Mussalmans adopting the modern Hindu Laws of succession and inheritance or the Marumakkattayam family system, still less am I for the Muhammadan Law (which follows more closely the religious rules laid down in the Holy Quran) being given up by the Mussalmans for the later Hindu Law which has departed (through the influence of decadent custom) far from the original religious sources of the same law. While I do not agree with the District Judge that the words "undivided family" could be properly used as regards members of these two Mussalman families, I have no doubt that the business at Souda should be treated on the analogy of the business of a joint Hindu trading family, that all the properties must be treated as if they were partly belongings of the two brothers Haji Hassan and Hammed as equal co-owners and partly the accretions to such properties held in co-ownership. I am aware that neither the principle of survivorship which was introduced by the Mitakshara in the case of joint Hindu family where one of the coparceners dies without a male issue, nor the principle of exclusion of females (with some exceptions) from succession in Hindu Law can be applied to these Mussalman families. There is also no question of right by birth. But other presumptions of common sense arising from the mode of their living, might, in my opinion, be safely applied. That customs, even modifying the Muhammadan Law, can be applied to Mussalmans is clear from Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-Din

HUSSAIN SAIB V. HASSAN SAIB.

Khan (13). It was argued that the properties which had been acquired before 1870, should be divided between the two branches in the proportion of seven-eighths and one eighth. But in respect of even some of the properties acquired before 1870 in the name of Hammed, the pattah was transferred to Hassan's son's name, thus showing that no distinction was made even as regards those properties between the rights of the two branches.

It was finally argued that at least the properties which belonged to Haji Hassan in 1845, should be divided into seven-eighths and one-eighth. But it seems to me that all the properties were treated as if they belonged to two Hindu brothers after 1848 and it is not wholly improbable that Hammed might have mixed up whatever properties he had in 1848 (there is no evidence worth the name to show that he was an absolute pauper when he began to assist his brother) with his brother's properties inextricably. I think that this is a case in which both equity and convenience require that the principles on which Scottish Courts act and which were approved of in the recent case in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (1) should be applied in this case. Actings and conduct of parties might give rise to estoppel where such actings and conduct have produced alterations of circumstances so great that without great loss and inconvenience, the parties cannot be put back in their original positions. I think that from 1848 till this suit was brought, the two brothers, their heirs and the heirs of their heirs have acted in such a manner that the decree passed by the District Judge can be fully justified on the basis that all parties have understood their rights as following from the properties being held in common ownership between the two branches for more than 60 years and the imperfect understanding or agreement between the two brothers which began in 1848, has become fully perfected by their own conduct and the conduct of their heirs.

The learned District Judge, while admitting that the plaintiff has not proved that any debt was incurred by his father in building a house which is now treated as family property, and that the 22nd defendant also has not proved that he has incurred certain debts in acquiring property treated as family property, has allowed these two parties to prove in execution proceedings that they have incurred such debts. I think he was wrong in allowing these claims to be proved afterwards, and he ought to have disallowed those claims for want of proof. As regards the debt alleged to have been incurred for maintenance (after the date of this suit) by the plaintiff's branch, this also cannot be allowed as the 9th defendant's liability, after the suit is brought, is only to be held accountable for half the net income of the family received by him after the date of suit and not to be tendering maintenance amount to the plaintiff's branch. The decree passed by the District Judge is further defective in not providing for the necessary accounts to be taken and in not reserving liberty to the parties to make applications connected with the taking of the accounts, the issuing of the necessary commissions for making partition and so on. Subject to the modifications above referred to, I would confirm the lower Court's decree with costs to be paid by the appellants to the contesting respondents.

BY THE COURT.—Under section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code, the decision of the District Judge on issues 12 and 14 is set aside and the issues are decided in the negative. The District Judge's decree will also be modified by adding directions to take the necessary accounts and by giving permission to the parties to make applications in connection with the taking of accounts. In other respects, the decree will stand confirmed with costs of the contesting respondents. The clerical errors pointed out in grounds 38 and 40 of the Appeal Memorandum will also be corrected by the lower Court.

Burmese Buddhist Law—Widow's power of disposal.

Under the Burmese Buddhist Law, a widow has an absolute power of disposing of the whole property subject to the right of others.

Ma Sein Ton v. Ma Son, 30 Ind. Cas. 588, referred to.

Mr. Ba Thein, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit belonged to San Ya and Ma Min Tha. After Maung San Ya's death a decree was obtained against Ma Min Tha in execution of which the land was sold, and it passed into the hands of the 3rd appellant Maung Po Myaing. The respondents who are the children of Maung San Ya and Ma Min Tha sued to recover half the land, on the ground that Ma Min Tha's interest in it was only one-half. The suit was dismissed, but on appeal, was decreed, following the rulings that the widow's absolute right of disposal extended to only one-half of the joint property of herself and her late husband. A Full Bench of this Court has now ruled in Ma Sein Ton v. Ma Son (1), that, subject to restrictions which do not apply to the present case, she has a right of disposal over the whole property. The plaintiffs accordingly had no right of action and their suit must be dismissed. The decree of the Divisional Court is reversed and that of the Sub-Divisional Court restored with costs throughout. Advocate's fees in this Court two gold mohurs.

Appeal accepted.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 17—Suit against adjudicated insolvent—Leave of Court, when to be obtained.

The leave contemplated under section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is leave which ought to be obtained before the commencement of a suit and cannot be granted after the same is filed.

Application made in Insolvency No. 216 of 1912, in the matter of Dwarkadas Tejbhandas and others adjudged insolvents.

Mr. Strangman, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—Dwarkadas Tejbhandas Khusberam Tejbhandas and Girdhardas Tejbhandas, who were then trading in the name of Tejbhandas Dwarkadas, were on the 11th of April 1912, on the application of some of their creditors, adjudicated insolvents in this Court and by an order made on such adjudication, all their property vested in the Official Assignee. From the date of the adjudication up to the present time, nothing seems to have been done. The adjudicated Insolvents have not even been called upon to file their schedule.

It appears that the firm of Nursoomal Gokaldas, who claim to be the insolvents' creditors for Rs 7,100, in entire ignorance of the fact that their debtors had been adjudicated insolvents, filed three suits in the Shikarpur Court in 1915 to recover the sums of moneys which they alleged were due to them. When the suits came on the Judge's Board for hearing, the insolvents objected to the suits going on, on the ground that the plaintiffs therein had not obtained the leave of the Court under section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act before filing suits against them. The learned Subordinate Judge while recognising the force of the objection, seems to have been of opinion that the defect could be cured by the plaintiffs therein obtaining the necessary leave even after the institution of the suit and he adjourned the hearing of the suits to enable the plaintiffs therein to apply for leave under section 17 to this Court.

JAMAL v. MOOLLA DAWOOD SONS & CO.

Mr. Strangman on behalf of the plaintiffs in these Shikarpur suits, now applies for leave to continue the suits. The question for decision is "have I power as Judge dealing with insolvency proceedings under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, to grant leave under section 17 after the suits have been instituted."

The question has been fully argued before me by the learned Counsel for the applicants and I regret to say I feel more than ever convinced that the view I expressed on a previous occasion, is the only possible view to take of the provisions of this section. I use the word regret advisedly because I feel that my decision if correct, will entail much hardship on the applicants. They filed the suits without any knowledge that their debtors had been adjudicated insolvents and if the suits now fail, not only would they be prejudiced in costs but it is possible that it may be argued that their claims are barred by the Law of Limitation. This is undoubtedly a case of great hardship.

The words of the section are so clear and unambiguous that there is no possibility of construing them in any way other than that leave must be obtained before the commencement of the action.

Omitting words that do not apply to this case, the section runs as follows:—

"No creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable in insolvency, shall during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings...commence any suit...except with the leave of the Court."

The words of the section are so clear and explicit that they leave no room for any construction other than the one I have placed upon them. No creditor shall commence a suit except with leave. This provision clearly negatives the suggestion that a suit commenced without leave can be continued by obtaining leave at any stage thereof.

Mr. Strangman has cited two English cases on the analogy of which he asked me to give him leave now. These cases have no bearing on the question before me. I have to construe a section of an Indian Act. The language of that section is so clear and emphatic that it can bear only one construction and it seems to me futile to invoke the assistance of cases decided under the provisions of other laws of another country.

The learned Counsel for the applicants has stated to me that Brother Macleod gave leave under section 171 of the Indian Companies Act after a suit had been filed without leave and he has relied on the fact that the phraseology of the two sections is the same. I have, however, nothing before me to show under what circumstances such leave was granted and what were the facts of that case. If the matter had been argued before the learned Judge and he had decided the point after considering the section, there would be some judgment showing the reasons for a decision which obviously would appear to be in conflict with the language of the section and I would have considered the judgment with great respect but there is nothing before me which affects my judgment in the present case.

It is quite clear to my mind that the leave contemplated under section 17 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is leave which ought to be obtained before commencement of a suit and cannot be granted after the same is filed.

I must, therefore, refuse the application.

Application rejected.

APPEAL FROM THE LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.

A. K. A. S. JAMAL—APPELLANT

versus

RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 73, 107, applicability of—Contract for sale of negotiable securities—Breach of contract—Damages, measure of—Difference between contract price and market price at date of breach—Purchaser, right of.

JAMAL V. MOOLLA DAWOOD SONS & CO.

In a contract for sale of negotiable securities, the measure of damages for breach is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the date of the breach. If the seller holds on to the securities after the breach, the speculation as to the way the market will subsequently go is the speculation of the seller, not of the buyer, the seller cannot recover from the buyer the loss below the market price at the date of the breach if the market falls, nor is he liable to the purchaser for the profit if the market rises. [p. 964, cols. 1 & 2.]

A plaintiff who sues for damages for breach of a contract for sale of negotiable securities owes the duty of taking all reasonable steps to mitigate the loss consequent upon the breach and cannot claim as damages any sum which is due to his own neglect, but the loss to be ascertained is the loss at the date of the breach. If at that date the plaintiff could do something or did something which mitigated the damage, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of it. But the fact that by reason of the loss of the contract which the defendant fails to perform the plaintiff obtains the benefit of another contract which is of value to him, does not entitle the defendant to the benefit of the latter contract. [p. 964, col. 2.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, dated July 24th, 1913; reported in 25 Ind. Cas. 799, affirming a judgment and decree of the same Court (Original Side) dated June 8th, 1913.

FACTS.—The facts material to the case have been sufficiently set forth in their Lordships' judgment.

No evidence was given of the market value of the shares on or about December 30th, 1911, or at any other time. The Court of first instance decided against the appellant on the ground that the appellant had the option to re-sell and having exercised his option, could not claim damages. This was confirmed by the Appellate Court.

Sir Erle Richards: The point in this appeal is a very short one, and it is a point purely of law; it is a point as to the measure of damages on the failure to accept shares. The point is shortly this. My clients, the appellants, contracted to sell shares and those shares were to be delivered at one date some months after the various contracts. When the time came, the shares were tendered; they had fallen very much in value; the respondents refused to take the shares, and we, therefore, sued and claimed as damages the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of breach. I submit to your Lordships that that is an absolutely well-founded elementary proposition of the law of damages, but the Court of Appeal have said that that is not the measure of damages, that you must look and see what the seller does afterwards with the shares. My position is that I could have held on to those shares or sold them all at once, or do as I did, nurse them and sell them in small quantities afterwards; it had nothing to do with the buyer after breach; my damages, as I submit to your Lordships were fixed at that time.

[LORD WRENBURY: He may take the shares as his own and sue for the difference as damages, and then he may do what he likes with the shares.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes; that is what I did; after I started the suit claiming the difference between the contract price and the price at the date of breach as damages, I sold them off in small quantities. I am going to submit to your Lordships that it is a simple proposition of law that the measure of damages is what I have said, namely, the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of breach. That is so, as I shall submit under the Indian Contract Act and under the Indian Law and all the authorities.

[LORD HALDANE: The whole question is whether you have to give credit for the profit you made on the re-sale of the shares?]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes.

[LORD HALDANE: That is the whole point?]

[LORD WRENBURY: I suppose the position is that on the 30th December you were entitled to take either of two courses. You could have said, "I shall keep the shares and charge you the difference between the contract price and the market price, and these properties will be mine." You could have said, "the shares are actually yours; I am going to avail myself of a clause in the contract and sell them." That must mean, "I am going to sell them as yours"; the man does not want authority to sell his own shares; if he is going to re-sell he sells the risk to somebody else.]

Sir Erle Richards: Would it be quite so; was not the auction option in the contract note a way of fixing the damages? I do not think the shares could have been held to pass,

JAMAL V. MOOLLA DAWOOD SONS & CO.

[LORD WRENBURY: The legal title would not pass; I said "contractually."]

Sir Erle Richards: I thought that one view and the true view of that contract note was that it gave the seller a way of fixing the damages; he could sell by auction. My view on that contract note, which I submit for your Lordship's consideration is, that it is giving a remedy to the seller if he likes to settle the damages.

[LORD HALDANE: An extra remedy?]

Sir Erle Richards: An extra remedy, and it is certainly a severe remedy; of course he may not have the money to hold the shares.

[LORD HALDANE: Your point is that there are two remedies. One which the ordinary law gives, the difference between the market price and the price fixed by the contract, and the other loss on the re-sale, and that the second is an option.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes.

[LORD HALDANE: Your case is, the whole of the relations between you and the purchaser came to an end on the date of due delivery.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes, that is it. I have various remedies and I have adopted this one.

[LORD HALDANE: What does section 107 of the Indian Contract Act say?]

Sir Erle Richards: Section 107 is a section which gives the seller who has a right of lien or stoppage in transitu, a right of sale.

[MR. AMEER ALI: When the buyer refuses to take.]

Sir Erle Richards: That comes at the end of a series of sections which deal with the seller's lien.

[LORD HALDANE: The buyer must bear any loss under that, but is not entitled to any profit.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes, and the buyer is not entitled to any profit which occurs by such re-sale.

[LORD HALDANE: I suppose that means he is to get the benefit of any profit in diminution of loss which diminishes what otherwise would be the loss.]

Sir Erle Richards: I think I should have to say that would not be a loss.

[LORD HALDANE: I think that is only what it means.]

Sir Erle Richards: It is only where there is a right of lien or stoppage in transitu. It was on that point that I asked your Lordship to glance at the sections before that, which begin at section 95. It is a budget of sections beginning with "seller's lien" and it deals with what lien a seller has. If your Lordship passes on, you come to the seller's right of stoppage in transitu or stoppage in transit, as it is called in the Indian Act. I think that begins at section 99.

[LORD HALDANE: Does this apply to shares?]

[MR. AMEER ALI: To everything.]

[LORD HALDANE: If so, there is a lien on shares for the price.]

Sir Erle Richards: If the property has passed, but I do not think the property had passed. With great respect I doubt whether section 107 applies to this case at all.

[LORD HALDANE: I suppose you say that no property ever passed, and there was no question of lien.]

Sir Erle Richards: That is why I called attention to the earlier sections of the Act where it is dealing with seller's lien and stoppage in transit, and it gives the seller in those two cases certain rights. It says in section 107, in those two cases of lien and stoppage, he has a right which he would not have at common law, to sell.

[LORD WRENBURY: Where the seller is in peril, he is protected by a lien on the goods or by a right of stoppage in transitu, but this seller never sold the shares or parted with them; they were registered in his name.]

[MR. AMEER ALI: Does the Indian Contract Act make any difference with regard to property?]

Sir Erle Richards: I do not think so. Shares are included in the definition of goods. I think, the whole point is covered by section 73. My comment and my submission for your Lordships' consideration is that section 107 does not apply to this case.

[LORD HALDANE: You have a lien when the goods are in transitu or when in the purchaser's hands still.]

JAMAL P. MOOLLA DAWOOD SONS & CO.

Sir Erle Richards: Then he gets a statutory right to sell, but it does not apply to the ordinary case of non-delivery at all I should have thought. That is my submission.

[LORD WRENBURY: Assume for a moment that it does apply, the section provides that the buyer is not entitled to make a profit.]

Sir Erle Richards: I think that must be so. I think that is the construction. It is before your Lordships

[LORD HALDANE: It would hit you if that section applied, because you would have to give credit for the diminution in loss occasioned by the shares being sold at a profit.]

Sir Erle Richards: I am really not concerned with that, I submit.

[LORD HALDANE: That is your other point, but if you were concerned with it, would not there be something in it? Would not it wipe out all the damages?]

[SIR JOHN EDGE: It would wipe out a great part of the damage; the buyer then would only lose if the seller made any loss on the result.]

Sir Erle Richards: I have a considerable balance that I have recovered at any rate. What I say is that section 107 has nothing to do with it, and does not apply at all; and as my learned friend, Mr. Coltman, is good enough to point out, it has always been construed that section 107 is an alternative remedy which you can apply if you like.

The cases referred to in the Chief Court's judgment are of a wholly different character. One is a case of wrongful dismissal, where a man was dismissed two years before the expiration of his contract, and the Court said he must not take as damages all the profits he would have derived from the payments for his services for those two years, because he had his personal freedom for those two years, and he must find out what that was worth and deduct that. These are all cases with reference to a contract which is running on.

Sir Erle Richards: The rule, I submit, is perfectly clear where you have a mercantile security.

[LORD HALDANE: There is apt to be a good deal of confusion in dealing with these cases on the measure of damages; for instance, certain special rules have been laid down in the case of a breach of covenant to repair or to carry out the terms of a building lease. Again, in some of the shipping cases and charter-party cases, a different rule has been laid down. The whole matter came before the House of Lords in a case I remember of the British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, Limited v. Underground Electric Railways Company of London, Limited (1), where we examined the question as to when you can take mitigating circumstances into account in estimating the measure of damages.]

Sir Erle Richards: May I remind your Lordship of a later case in which your Lordship gave judgment, Williams Brothers v. Ed. T. Agius Limited (2)?

[LORD HALDANE: That was a case in which we considered in the House of Lords the rule in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3); that is the other way round. That is a case where a man contracts to buy and sues for breach of contract to sell to him, and it is held that the measure of damages is what he has to pay in the market on the day on which he gets the goods; that is not to be interfered with by anything subsequent. There are the special cases dealt with in the earlier case in the House of Lords of the British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company Limited v. Underground Electric Railways Company of London, Limited (1). You say it is the analogy of Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3).]

Sir Erle Richards: I think it has always been laid down quite clearly, I submit it has, that in dealing with the breach of contract of sale of a mercantile security, you go by the market price and have the damages at the time.

[LORD HALDANE: You cannot lay it down rigidly; in the case in the House of Lords it was held that the British Westinghouse Company contracted to supply certain motors to the Metropolitan Electric Railway (1) (1912) A. C. 673; 81 L. J. K. B. 132; 107 L. T. 325; 56 S. J. 734.
(2) (1914) A. C. 510; 83 L. J. K. B. 715; 110 L. T. 865; 19 Com. Cas. 200, 58 S. J. 377; 30 T. L. R. 351.
(3) 18 Q. B. D. 67; 56 L. J. Q. B. 202; 56 L. T. 594; 35 W. R. 241; 6 Asp. M. C. 100.

JAMAL U. MOOLLA DAWOOD SONS & CO.

Company and they had broken their contract, they had not supplied the quantity in time; thereupon the Electric Railway Company were really very glad, because they discovered in the meantime that there were other motors which had been invented since and put on the market which very greatly reduced the working cost, and the breach of their contract enabled them to refuse to go on with the Westinghouse Company and to buy the other motors which saved them a great deal of money. The breach of contract was a great profit, and we held that that must be taken into account because the transactions were so interconnected.]

Sir Erle Richards: I remember that case and I have it here.

[LORD HALDANE: That was an exception to the general rule. We said there were other exceptions; a covenant to repair, for instance, stood on a different footing.]

Sir Erle Richards: The landlord may have pulled down his house, but he is entitled to recover.

[LORD HALDANE: We held you take that into account; we did not touch the ordinary rule in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), the action for the sale of goods; in Williams Brothers v. Ed. T. Agius Limited (2), we affirmed that.]

Sir Erle Richards: I am obliged to your Lordship; I do not know that I need discuss it further, because I submit to your Lordships that William Brothers v. Ed. T. Agius Limited (2), affirmed the rule, and your Lordship in that case affirmed the judgment of Lord Esher in a case called Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3).

[LORD HALDANE: That, as I said, was the other way round.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes, but it is still the same principle, I thought perhaps the one way of putting it, is that where you have got a perfectly clear case of market value, then you have got your damages absolutely ascertained, in the case of the motors, and so on, but where you have got no market value you have to look at something which will help you to find market value.

[LORD HALDANE: Where is the motors case reported?]

Sir Erle Richards: In (1912) A. C. 673. I think I might begin the submission I wish to make on the point of law by referring to the Indian Contract Act, which of course governs here, and I submit, it puts the rule quite clearly if your Lordship would be kind enough to refer to section 73 of that Act. I shall submit to your Lordship that British Westinghouse case (1) is on another point.

[LORD HALDANE: I do not suggest it is not, but what I want is to get the principle quite clear. It is not the case that in every instance of delivery, you have simply to look at the price in the market and compare it with the other price; there are exceptions, and in the British Westinghouse case (1), one of the exceptions was recognised. That does not at all necessarily touch the case you are dealing with. This is the way it was laid down on page 688:—"The quantum of damage is a question of fact, and the only guidance the law can give, is to lay down general principles which afford at times but scanty assistance in dealing with particular cases. The Judges who give guidance to Juries in these cases, have necessarily to look at their special character, and to mould, for the purposes of different kinds of claim, the expression of the general principles which apply to them, and this is apt to give rise to an appearance of ambiguity. Subject to these observations, I think that there are certain broad principles which are quite well settled. The first is that, as far as possible, he who has proved a breach of a bargain to supply what he contracted to get, is to be placed, as far as money can do it, in as good a situation as if the contract had been performed. The fundamental basis is thus compensation for pecuniary loss naturally flowing from the breach; but this first principle is qualified by a second, which imposes on a plaintiff the duty of taking all reasonable steps to mitigate the loss consequent on the breach, and debars him from claiming any part of the damage which is due to his neglect to take such steps." In other words, you were bound to sell these shares as on the day when the contract was broken you could not have waited and, if they had gone down further, claimed more. Then in the words of Lord Justice James in Dunkirk Colliery Company v. Lever (4), "The person who has broken the contract, is not to be exposed to additional cost by reason of the plaintiffs not doing what they ought to have done as reasonable men, and the plaintiffs not being under any obligation to do anything otherwise than in the ordinary course of business". As Lord Justice James indicates, this second principle does not impose on the plaintiff an obligation to take any step which a reasonable and prudent man would not ordinarily take in the course of his business. But when in the course of his business, he has taken action arising out of the transaction, which action has diminished his loss, the effect in actual diminution of the loss he has suffered, may be taken into account even though there was no duty on him to act. Just as when you sell the shares on the day when they ought to have been taken by the plaintiff, you can recover that loss on that day, so if they rise in value on that day, it would go in reduction of the damages. Then: Staniforth v. Lyall (5) illustrates this rule. Staniforth v. Lyall (5) was the case of a chartered ship where the charterers were to load her; the ship went to New Zealand, but found neither agent nor cargo there, and there was no one there to put goods on board; the owners of the ship made another voyage and they made a profit on that voyage and it was held that that must be taken into account, that they had done what reasonable and prudent people would have done; they did not lay up the ship in New Zealand but they took it back by another route, and because that was the natural and proper course which a prudent business man would take, if they made money, they were held to account for it. In that case, we examined a number of decisions and distinguished them; I need not read it all, but you will notice what is said there. We say there: "The cases as to the measure of damages for breach of a covenant by a lessee to deliver up the demised premises in repair, illustrate yet another class of authorities in which the qualifying rule has been excluded." And we held that in the case in question, it being the natural and reasonable course for the Railway Company as business people to get new motors at once, and they having made a profit in doing it, it was analogous to what have been your situation if the shares had gone up in value, that there was no damage. I do not think this affects the rule in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3) at all; it was not intended to.

(4) 9 Ch. D. 20; 59 L. T. 239; 26 W. R. 841.

Sir Erle Richards: I submit it was not intended to, and your Lordship will not forget that you re-affirmed Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), two years afterwards, in Williams Brothers v. Ed. T. Agius Limited (2). The real point was somewhat analogous to this in this general way that the question was whether the measure of damages was to be the difference between the contract price and the market price or whether you had to look at what happened with regard to re-sale, and so on. It was complicated by the question whether some of the parties had made contracts varying their liability; there was a question of fact about a contract given by a broker Ghiron, and it was very complicated.]

[LORD HALDANE: The pivot is in the last few lines of the first part of the headnote. A contracted to sell to W and W contracted to sell to somebody else, and the question was whether damages ought to have been paid by A to W.]

Sir Erle Richards: May I say on this case that Lord Haldane, I think, has summed up this point at page 520? I am rather anxious to avoid the other question; that deals with the question about the broker's authority. If you would kindly turn to page 520, you will, see Lord Haldane says this:—"My Lords, it was argued for the respondents that, even assuming the appellants to be entitled to claim full damages, from the respondents without deduction, the principle laid down by the Court of Appeal in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), which was accepted by the Courts below as binding them, was wrong. In that case, it was held that in estimating the damages for non-delivery of goods under a contract, the market value at the date of the breach was the decisive element. In the judgment delivered by Lord Escher, he laid down that the law does not take into account in estimating the damages anything that is accidental as between the plaintiff and the defendant, as for instance, a contract entered into by the plaintiff with a third party. He said that if the plaintiff had sold the goods before the breach for more than the market price at that date, he could not recover on that footing, and that it would, therefore, be unjust if the market price did not govern when he had sold for less. This decision is quite in harmony with what was recently said in this House in British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, Limited v. Underground Electric Railways Company of London, Limited (1), where it was pointed out that a subsequent transaction, if it is to be taken into account in mitigating damages, must be one which arises out of transactions naturally attributable to the consequence of the breach, and must not be of an independent character. I agree with the statement of the law in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), and with the view of this part of the present case taken by all the learned Judges in the Courts below. I will only add on this point that I do not think that the law so laid down, has been affected by section 51 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. By sub-section 3 of the section, the general principle is recognised as the rule which obtains prima facie, and I do not find in sub-section 2 anything inconsistent with this recognition."

(5) 7 Bing. 169; 4 M. & P. 529; 9 L. J. (o. s.) C. P. 23; 131 E. R. 65; 83 R. R. 420.

Sir Erle Richards: I was going to ask your Lordship to refer to that.

[LORD HALDANE: "If these were the only facts of the case, the contention of the respondents would be precisely that view of the damages, in the case of an article purchaseable in the market, which was negatived by the decision in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3). That case rests on the sound ground that it is immaterial what the buyer is intending to do with the purchased goods. He is entitled to recover the expense of putting himself into the position of having those goods, and this he can do by going into the market and purchasing them at the market price." You see what I said was this: The goods are not delivered, the buyer cannot come and say, in making his claim,—before the date of delivery, I sold them at a higher price and I lost profit by the non-delivery. On the other hand, the seller is not entitled to say,—the buyer has sold at a loss and that is to be taken into account on the other side.]

Sir Erle Richards: I was going to read that, but I should have begun a little earlier on page 530, where his Lordship says: "Inasmuch as this is a plain case of a failure to deliver a specified quantity of an article obtainable in the market, the measure of damages is well established. The case comes under the rule laid down in the case of Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), and regularly and repeatedly followed ever since, and ultimately embodied in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, section 51, sub section 3." I do rely upon Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3) because that was the case where the question was whether it was the market value of the goods; it was a case of a purchaser not getting delivery, but the same principle must apply, I suppose.

[LORD HALDANE: They are all subject to what was said by Lord Justice James in the Dunkirk Colliery Company v. Lever (4) quoted in the British Westinghouse case (1), that the business man, when a business contract is broken, must do the best he can to diminish the loss. In your case you say you did the best, which was to go into the market on the day when delivery ought to have been taken of the shares and to sell them, and you did that. That is your case. Then as I say according to Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), and these other authorities, the defendant had nothing whatever to do with what you did subsequent to the breach. That is the way you put it?]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes, and I say that Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), is in my favour on that view and Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), has the authority of the House of Lords.

Now, my Lords might I call your attention to the sections of the Indian Contract Act? I want to refer to section 73.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: I suppose a higher measure of damages might exist than the market price, if one man had said to the other, I want to buy 500 tons, or whatever it may be, to deliver under a contract at such and such a price that I have already got. That would be a different case.]

Sir Erle Richards: That was the case of the shoes going to Paris.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: The market price would not come in there and you have given notice.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes, however, let me read section 73.

JAMAL U. MOOLLA DAWOOD SONS & CO.

[MR. AMEER ALI: What was the meaning of your two letters that you were going to resell them? Will you explain that before you read the section?]

Sir Erle Richards: Frankly I stand on my letter of the 26th February.

[MR. AMEER ALI: You do not stand on the previous letters?]

Sir Erle Richards: No, I now stand on my letter of the 26th February. These negotiations were going on and I took action on the 26th February. Would your Lordships look at section 73 of the Indian Contract Act? It is Act IX of 1872; it is headed "Of the Consequences of Breach of Contract." "When a contract has been broken, the party who suffers by such breach is entitled to receive, from the party who has broken the contract, compensation for any loss or damage caused to him thereby, which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such breach, or which the parties knew, when they made the contract, to be likely to result from the breach of it. Such compensation is not to be given for any remote and indirect loss or damage sustained by reason of the breach. When an obligation resembling those created by contract, has been incurred and has not been discharged, any person injured by the failure to discharge it, is entitled to receive the same compensation from the party in default as if such person had contracted to discharge it and had broken his contract." Then, "Explanation. In estimating the loss or damage arising from a breach of contract, the means which existed of remedying the inconvenience caused by the non-performance of the contract, must be taken into account."

[LORD HALDANE: That is the principle recognised in the British Westinghouse case (1).]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: Also the ship case; they sent the ship to New Zealand and with a homeward charter-party and the charterer refused to take her at New Zealand, the owner did not send the ship home empty; he got another voyage.]

[LORD HALDANE: And as they did make a profit, it was a diminution of the damages.]

[SIR JOHN EDGE: The charter cases do not apply.]

[LORD HALDANE: Just as in the British Westinghouse case (1), the Railway Company got a great advantage, you might, if the shares had gone up very much on the day you resold, because your business was to get the best price on that day.]

Sir Erle Richards: Then I should have had nothing to complain of, but I chose to take the speculation myself, would your Lordship kindly look at the first illustration to section 73: "A contracts to sell and deliver 50 maunds of saltpetre to B at a certain price, to be paid on delivery. A breaks his promise. B is entitled to receive from A by way of compensation the sum, if any, by which the contract price falls short of the price for which B might have obtained 50 maunds of saltpetre of like quality at the time when the saltpetre ought to have been delivered."

[LORD HALDANE: That is Redocanachi v. Milburn (3).]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes, but I submit to your Lordship, it covers me precisely; it says you are to take the market price.

[LORD WRENBURY: This is the vendor.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes, but I think there can be no difference.

[LORD WRENBURY: I do not say there is, but it is not this case.]

[LORD HALDANE: It is just the other way on.]

Sir Erle Richards: The same measure of damages must surely apply as between vendor and purchaser. Perhaps, I might read Sir Frederick Pollock's note upon this; he has written a book upon the Indian Contract Act.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: Is it usual to refer to a living author in that way? We have hesitated to adopt it here.]

Sir Erle Richards: Then I will not read it. There is always a difficulty about applying that rule here, for instance, Mr. Mayne is fortunately still alive.

[LORD WRENBURY: Counsel is always capable of getting over that; he says I am not going to read it as Sir Frederick Pollock's opinion, but I will take this as part of my argument.]

[LORD HALDANE: It is not right to read the text-books of living authors, but if there is any point, you can give it to us as part of your argument.]

Sir Erle Richards: It is only saying just what I have said, that the market price is to govern, and he quotes authorities some of which I can refer to. I submit that covers my case absolutely.

[LORD HALDANE: The illustrations (c) and (d) seem to be very much in point.]

Sir Erle Richards: I was going to read those: "(c) A contracts to buy of B at a stated price 50 maunds of rice, no time being fixed for delivery. A afterwards informs B that he will not accept the rice if tendered to him. B is entitled to receive from A by way of compensation, the amount, if any, by which the contract price exceeds that which B can obtain for the rice at the time but A informs B that he will not accept it." There you have the market price at the time of breach; that is what I rely upon, the same as in (a).]

[LORD HALDANE: You say the principle upon which all those sections rest and upon which Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), rests, is not a denial of what Lord Justice James said about there being the duty of the person whose right is violated to take such reasonable steps as he can, to mitigate the damage to the person who has broken his contract, but they rest on this that it is the proper course for a person who has contracted to sell goods and whose goods have not been accepted, to go into the market as soon as he learns that the contract is broken and to resell the goods; then he discharges the duty of mitigating loss as far as he can, and when he has done that, he can recover the difference and will have to account for the profit if perchance, he has made a profit.]

Sir Erle Richards: I am obliged. That is all his duty and all he has to do in the way of mitigating damages in that case where there is a market.

[LORD HALDANE: After that, if there has been a sale which is quite unconnected with this transaction, or if there has been an opportunity of sale quite unconnected with the transaction, it does not come into account.]

Sir Erle Richards: That really is my whole position. I have read illustration (c) but I think your Lordships will have noticed illustration (d) also.

[MR. AMBER ALI: At what intervals did you sell the shares?]

Sir Erle Richards: The sales went on right up to November, in the year of action; your Lordship will find it on the last page of the record.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: I should like you to draw attention to illustration (d).]

Sir Erle Richards: I was going to read that: "A contracts to buy B's ships for Rs. 60,000 but breaks his promise. A must pay to B by way of compensation, the excess, if any, of the contract price over the price which B can obtain for the ship at the time of the breach of promise." Lord Haldane put it that the prudent man who has to realise then has done his duty so far as mitigation of damages is concerned, and he has no other duty. In other cases, he may have to do more, but when you have the case of a marketable security, it is a thing that has a price in the market and his only duty is to realise then.

[LORD HALDANE: If he makes losses by holding on after the date of the breach of contract, he cannot recover the extra loss.]

Sir Erle Richards: No.

[LORD HALDANE: It seems to me all the Chief Justice says is, he gives illustrations of certain cases where the duty of the plaintiff was held to have bound him to take a course which led to mitigation, which mitigation reduced the damages.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes, I should rather like to refer to the first case he cites, because it is a case which is cited in the books; it is a decision of Lord Denman, Mr. Justice Patteson, Mr. Justice Coleridge and Mr. Justice Erle. It is the case of Pott v. Flather (6), which he mentions on page 60, line 4. This is a case the Chief Justice greatly relied upon and I submit, it is in my favour. The headnote is this: "Plaintiffs, on the 20th of October 1845, sold the defendant twenty railway shares at 25s. premium, no day being mentioned for the delivery of the scrip. On the 21st of October, the shares had fallen to 14s. premium, and on that day, but after business hours, the defendant gave the plaintiffs notice that he should not take the shares. On the 22nd, the shares were at 8s. premium, and the price continued to fall till the 6th of December, when the plaintiffs sold the shares at 17s. discount. An action being brought for breach of the defendant's contract:—Held, that the proper measure of damages was the difference in price between the 20th and 22nd of October." There was a case where the vendor held on for a time and a loss resulted, and they held he could not recover. Mr. Justice Patteson on page 368 says: "In an action for not delivering, the plaintiff is not bound to purchase other goods, and yet the measure of damages must be the difference in price between the time of the contract and the time of the delivery. But here you can hardly contend that you might wait for any period in order to sell. If the shares had risen in value, and there had, therefore, eventually been a profit on them, your argument would go to show that the defendant could have sued the plaintiffs for the difference. If the plaintiffs could wait for any time in order to see how the market would turn, the reciprocity would be all on one side." The judgments are not reported, but it came to this, that they allowed damages as on the date of the breach and said that must be the rule.

[LORD HALDANE: I suppose what they have said against you here is, you did not sell upon the day when the shares should have been taken. You said, my rights are ascertained, henceforth, we treat the shares as ours, they have never been appropriated to you, they are our shares; you sold them afterwards and you put the money in your pocket. The question is whether that is so connected with the original transaction and arises out of it that it can be deemed to be part of it. That is an instance of the British Westinghouse case (1).]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes, I submit it does not and that clearly was not the suggestion of the defendant in his written statement, but I submit I have no obligation to sell at all.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: Some of these shares were sold actually in the August and October following.]

Sir Erle Richards: We sold some through the May; we were able to nurse these shares; the first lot we sold at a loss.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: You sold in July, again in August and again in October.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes. My Lords, I have very little more to say; I think I have made my point. I submit the business of a vendor of marketable securities when his buyer will not accept—I take that case in order to eliminate other questions—is this: he can do what he likes with the shares; he is not bound to sell them at all. For the purpose of assessing the damages, you assume that he has sold; that is for the purpose of getting the measure of damages, because that is what I apprehend, we must do to mitigate the loss, but he is not bound to sell; it was open to him to hold them to this day if he liked; there is no obligation on a man to sell at all, and it is said in one of the cases if he does not sell and loses on the risk, he cannot recover it from the buyer. The positions as between him and the seller are fixed once and for all on the result which a prudent man would have obtained if he sold on the day of the breach. That is the whole point, I think.

[LORD WRENBURY: The proposition is this, is it not: Breach of contract by purchaser; the vendor says, I agree there has been breach of contract, contractually these shares were yours, the purchasers, but you have broken it, they are not yours now, they are mine; they are mine, and I have also a right in damages against you. I have two things, first, the shares, and secondly, a right in damages, and as from that moment, the shares are his and not the purchaser's. If they go up, so much the better for him, if they go down, so much the worse for him; that is his affair.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes.

[LORD HALDANE: And in estimating the damages, he is bound to do what a prudent person would have done at the date of the breach. He can say it is only a question of estimating the damages: that is my claim for damages and I limit it to that, and then the shares being his by a transaction quite unconnected with the contract of sale, if he makes a profit or makes a loss, so much the worse for him in the second case, so much the better for him in the first case.]

Sir Erle Richards: Really that is my main point.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: You sold in April under the market price of the 30th December; you are not claiming the loss on that.]

Sir Erle Richards: No.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: In April you sold at 4s.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: The market price at the time of the breach was 4s. 3d. you would not be entitled to claim the extra 3d.]

Sir Erle Richards: No.

[LORD HALDANE: Where there is a profit arising by something done naturally in the same transaction, as, for instance, what the Railway Company did in the British Westinghouse case (1), or as for instance, what was done in Staniforth v. Lyall (5), where the charterers did not take delivery of the ship when it arrived in New Zealand and where the owner made the other voyage and made a profit, there you must bring that into account, but when you have sold or estimated your loss on the day on which the contract is broken, then you have done all that a prudent person is called on to do; you have fulfilled your duty, henceforth the shares are yours and you claim the damages. That is your argument.]

Sir Erle Richards: Yes. I say, of course, if there was a profit arising from what a prudent man would have done in mitigation of damages in selling, I must give credit for that, but as I took the course I did, my case is that the whole matter is crystallised on the day of the breach and you have only to look at what a prudent man would do. I submit whether he elects to hold them or give them away or sell them, are not matters you should take into consideration in estimating the measure of damages. I submit that is fixed once for all by the market value on the day of the breach.

Mr. Coltman: My Lords, I only desire to add a very few words to what my learned leader has said, and these few words will be addressed to section 73 of the Indian Contract Act and the illustrations. I desire to point out that if the judgment of the Appellate Side of the Chief Court of Lower Burma is right, that will make it necessary to add further provisions to section 73, because that would involve this, that in every case you would have to make an enquiry as to what the plaintiff had done with the goods or the shares which he had retained right up to the date of trial, instead of ascertaining the damages in the way set out in the section. That would certainly be a surprising doctrine to introduce, certainly in India, and I think here. As I say, it would really make these illustrations entirely inconclusive illustrations: (c) would have to be qualified by saying that that would be the measure of damages provided the seller had not at any day before the trial in fact sold the goods for a higher price than the market price on the day of the breach. With regard to the question of his suggested doctrine of election in this case, I would only say one word, and that is, that it was not proved or suggested that the defendant was in any way prejudiced by the change of mind on the part of the plaintiff, because the market price was the same.

[LORD HALDANE: I do not quite know what election means. When a man has two alternatives and is bound to one or other of those alternatives and has to elect between them and he cannot have both, then he elects for one and he may be held to that, but here you say, I suppose, that in no sense is this a case of election.]

Mr. Coltman: I do say in no sense is it a case of election, and on that my position is strengthened because it cannot be suggested that my change of mind in any way prejudiced the defendant.

[LORD WRENCH: Is not this point out somewhat in this way: Under the contract, the buyer was entitled to do something and he elected and said I am going to do it, but, did not, whereupon the purchaser says, I am entitled to the profit of your doing something else. I do not see much sequence of argument in that. It is quite true he said, I am going to re-sell, and if he re-sold, he had to re-sell by auction, but he never did re-sell by auction. What happens? It is said, because he re-sold somehow else; I am entitled to the profits.]

[LORD HALDANE:—He was under no obligation to sell by auction and he put himself under none.]

Mr. Coltman: If your Lordship pleases. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Frank Dodd: My Lords, I appear on behalf of the respondents to this appeal, and I would call your Lordships' attention to what would be the effect, I can only point it out as a consequence, of a successful appeal in this case, namely, that a very well known rule of law would be entirely broken because the rule of law in this and all Courts is that the damages for the breach of a contract, especially of a mercantile contract, must be such a sum as will compensate the person against whom the breach has been made for any loss or damage which he has suffered and which naturally flowed from the breach.

[LORD HALDANE: But you must have some day at which the settlement is ascertained.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: I am going to suggest that, I am not endeavouring to evade it, there must be a date.

[LORD HALDANE: I only took exception to your statement of the principle because the date is the material point, and you did not mention the date.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: I was going to say a reasonable date is an absolutely essential point. I cannot go on and assume that because the man took the shares to himself, and kept them for a twelve-month and then, and then only, was able to make a profit, that I am entitled to come at the end of that period and say that that part of that profit belonged to me and was mine.

[LORD HALDANE: Any more than he would be entitled to claim the loss if he waited twelve-months and made a loss?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: Exactly so. There is no dispute about the breach on the 30th or 31st December, the due date; there can be no dispute about the intention of the appellant after that date, it is manifested by his letters which go on to the 4th January.

[LORD HALDANE: You reminded me that the date of due delivery was the 30th December; the date on which the first actual sale was made was what?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: The 28th February.

[LORD HALDANE: More than two months later?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: Exactly two months later.

[LORD HALDANE: The damages claimed, of course are on the 30th December, as ascertained on that date?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: Yes.

[LORD HALDANE: Now there were sales upon the 28th February: What do you say about that?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: There was one in March, the proceedings commenced in March, and I say all those proceedings, certainly up to the proceedings on the 22nd March, were proceedings pursuant to the notice given on the 30th December and repeated down to the 4th January pending the negotiations which had been taking place between the parties.

[LORD WRENBURY: The 26th February was quite the other way. On the 26th February, the vendor in substance said: I am not going to sell, I am going to claim the difference between market price and contract price against you on the 30th December?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: The letter says so; at that time I suggest he had no right to go back: I want to suggest that.

[LORD HALDANE: You are going to put the case I understand it in this way, that the duty of a prudent man was to take whatever was the right course. On the 30th December, he might, if he had liked, have said: I will take the market value and claim on that footing, and if I suffer loss subsequently that is for me to bear, not for the defendant. But he may also say: The prudent course to take is to hold the shares and watch my opportunity; it is better for you and me that I should do that, and then he subsequently sells; you have to make out that it is mutu cont extu with the original transaction.]

[LORD WRENBURY: Do you say he said, I am going to hold the shares and sell them for your benefit only if the market rises?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: I cannot say he said that.

[LORD WRENBURY: He said, "I am going to sell by auction on the 2nd", three days hence.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: Then on the 4th January he said, "We shall follow the course indicated, but did not"; there were negotiations going on for the purpose so far as I can make out, until the 26th February.

[LORD HALDANE: I do not think he is to be tied to his statement that he was going to sell by auction, except as an admission that that was a course a reasonable and prudent man would have taken; he was under no contract or duty.]

[LORD WRENBURY: His understanding of it was, "I am going to sell by auction," and I apprehend if you could say if he had sold by auction, he would have got 5s. 6d. then you would have a very good case.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: I am not bound to use the words "by auction." By his contract he is limited to auction. By the 107th section of the Indian Contract Act he is entitled to sell, which is a different matter. Certainly the learned Judge in the first instance seems to have been clearly of opinion that what they were doing was a sale under the 107th section. The Officiating Chief Justice mentions it in his judgment. My point is this, if there was a time limit of sales of any kind at all it was clearly passed over until the 26th February. I think the sale in November is shown on the other side to have been of a large block of shares part of which shares were Mr. Jamal's who had nothing to do with this transaction. There were 1299 out of the last block in November; that admittedly had nothing to do with this.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: When do you say these people ought to have sold?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: They could not sell while negotiations were going on.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: If there were no negotiations going on, when must they have sold?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: If there had been none they should have sold on the day after the 4th January.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: They might have endeavoured to sell at once.]

[LORD HALDANE: On the 30th December.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: I should say they could have sold on the 1st January.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: It is not in dispute that the difference between the market price and the contract price on the 1st January is 4s 3d.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: May I correct myself? They could not have sold on the 1st January because three of the contracts were made pursuant to the rules of the Rangoon Stock Exchange and they had to wait till the next sale day on the Stock Exchange.

[MR. AMEER ALI: On the 4th January; they gave seven days by the letter.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: Yes, after that they seem to have negotiated, and certainly while negotiations were going on they could not have possibly sold.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: I am not so sure of that. When do you say they were bound to sell?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: Bound to sell at any reasonable time after the parties were completely at issue.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: At any reasonable time after the issue was joined in this suit.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: No, after the parties were at issue and it was obvious a settlement could not be arrived at.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: They were at issue on the 26th of February.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: On the 28th of February these gentlemen started and sold some.

[LORD HALDANE: Is it your case that they got into negotiations and they came to an agreement that what a prudent person would do would be to negotiate and not to sell on the 30th of December or immediately thereafter, but to go on and wait for an opportunity? Is that your case?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: I would like your Lordships, if I dared, to accept that as my case, but I dare not say that to your Lordships.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: I want to understand your case. On your case if the market price of the shares had fallen to 3s. on the 28th of February, would they have been enabled to claim the difference between the 3s. and the 12s. from you?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: I think so.

[LORD HALDANE: You must say that.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: I do say it.

[LORD HALDANE: You cannot help yourself. Then you get so very near all the things that were put by Lord Justice Brett in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3) as difficulties.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: The question is if there is a breach of a contract and by a course of contract between the two parties the date for determining the right which accrued upon the breach of contract has been postponed, on whichever side it falls that postponement is an element which must be considered in the judgment. It is perfectly clear in this case that 4s. 3d. was the price on the 28th of February and it was on the 30th of December?

[LORD HALDANE: Now, just let us see, to get at distinctly what happened: Shall we take your case on the documents on the letters? In the letter of the 30th of December the Solicitors say that the seller will be forced to sell the shares by public auction on or about the 2nd proximo; that is the proposal, but they did not do that.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: He could not unless there was a public auction sale.

[LORD WRENBURY: It is "on or about."]

Mr. Frank Dodd: There is to be a public auction sale in three of the contracts.

[LORD WRENBURY: He says he will sell on or about.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: Yes.

[LORD HALDANE: You said he could not sell on the 2nd.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: He would have to wait until there was a sale. I admit his right to sell if there had been no negotiations pending on the 1st January if he had the means of complying with the contract.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: Where do you raise this point in your written statement?]

[LORD HALDANE: He does not raise it.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: No, I do not raise it.

[LORD HALDANE: Anything that is argued we will take as open on the somewhat general terms of the written statement. You did not raise that.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: No.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: You simply deny the proposition of the other side, you put them to proof.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: According to the rules of pleading, we never plead to damages.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: I am perfectly well aware of that: You were pleading an alternative arrangement by which his right to charge you with a breach of contract was postponed. Where did you plead that?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: It is not pleaded.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: That you would have to plead; that would be a confession and avoidance, would it not?]

Mr. Frank Dodd: I doubt whether it was a material plea, with the pleadings put in, as they were after the matters had been going on.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: It probably would have been material to the decision of the case, but you now allege that owing to some arrangement or negotiation going on between them he could not elect to treat the contract as broken on the 30th of December; he would have to wait until after the 26th of February.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: My Lords, I do not want to go through the cases with regard to that, and I agree, if I may respectfully say so, with the suggestion that this is a case which might be discussed purely and simply according to the Indian Law, and in that Indian Law at all events the rule as to contract price and market price has not been so embodied as it has been embodied into the English Law, because you cannot find that rule in any part of the Indian Contract Act, although it appears in its double form in sections 50 and 51 of the English Sale of Goods Act, 1893. Certainly the rule is one which was commonly regarded as a rule between vendor and purchaser but which is not in fact a rule between vendor and purchaser. In India you must come according to section 73. I will not ask your Lordships to let me read that again because you have already heard it. That only says that he shall have the damages which reasonably and naturally follow from the purchase, without any assistance of a fixed rule that prima facie the damages are to be calculated as the difference between the two respective prices. This is absolutely and definitely fixed as the first thing to be considered by any Tribunal and if you remember the date of the judgment, which is in December, long after the whole of these sales had been passed; I submit with great respect any Judge charging an English Jury in a similar case to this would have called attention to the fact that this man had made these profits and the Jury might have had that question put to them.

JAMAL V. MOOLLA DAWOOD SONS & CO.

[SIR JOHN EDGE: He probably would have landed them in the Court of Appeal.]

Mr. Frank Dodd: No, if he called the attention of the Jury to the question as to whether or not the man had taken these over as his own shares and took his own risk, I think he would not have landed them in the Court of Appeal if he had called the attention of the Jury to that, or if the Judge acting as a Jury in this case had properly directed himself or called attention to the fact that this sum which they awarded, the absolute loss out of pocket, was the real measure of damages which Mr. Jamal the appellant here had suffered.

JUDGMENT.

LORD WRENBURY.—Under six contracts made at various dates between April and August 1911 the plaintiff (the appellant) was seller to the defendants of certain 23,500 shares at prices amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 1,84,125-10. The date for delivery was the 20th December 1911. The contract notes contained a term providing that in the event of the buyer not making payment on the settlement day the seller should have the option of reselling the shares by auction, and any loss arising should be recoverable from the buyer. In some cases the words ran: "by auction at the Exchange at the next meeting," &c.

By the 30th December the shares had fallen largely in value. On that day the vendor tendered the shares and asked payment of the price, adding: "Failing compliance with this request by to-day our client will be forced to sell the said shares by public auction on or about the 2nd proximo, responsible for all losses sustained thereby." The purchasers did not pay the sum demanded. They set up a contention that the seller was indebted to them on another transaction, and they sent cheques for the differential sum of Rs. 75,925-10, and called for a transfer of the shares. On the 2nd January 1912 the seller repudiated the claim to a set-off, and repeated: "We have now to give you notice that our client intends to re-sell these shares and to institute a suit against you for the recovery of any loss which may result from that course." The purchasers stopped payment of the cheques, and nothing turns upon the fact that they were given.

Negotiations ensued between the parties which extended to 26th February 1912. On that day the seller, by his agents, wrote to the purchasers a letter as follows:—

"71, Phayre Street, Rangoon,

"Dear Sirs,

"We are instructed by Mr. A. K. A. S. Jamal that he had not hitherto taken any steps to enforce his claim against you for failing to pay for and take delivery of 23,500 shares in the British Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, at your request, in order that his claim might, if possible, be settled. It now appears that no active steps are being taken to settle the matter but that much time is being lost. Our client will therefore now proceed to enforce his rights by suit unless the sum of Rs. 1,09,219-6 is paid to him by way of compensation before the end of this week.

"The amount claimed is arrived at by deducting Rs. 74,906-4, the value of 23,500 shares at 4s. 3d., from Rs. 1,84,125-10, the agreed price of the shares.

"Yours faithfully,

"GILES AND COLTMAN."

The 4s. 3d. a share there mentioned was the market price of the shares on the 30th December.

On the 22nd March the seller commenced a suit to recover Rs. 1,09,218-12 as damages for breach measured by the difference between the contract price of the shares and their market price (4s. 3d. a share) on the date of the breach, the 30th December 1911. This is (with a trifling variance) the same sum and arrived at in the same way as the Rs. 1,09,219-6 mentioned in the letter.

Immediately after the letter of the 26th February 1912, viz., on the 28th February, the seller commenced to make sale of the shares. He sold them all at various dates from the 28th February onwards. In one case the sale was at less than 4s. 3d. (viz., at 4s.). In one case it was at 4s. 3d. In every other case it was at a higher price.

The decision under appeal is one which gives the purchaser the benefit of the increased prices which the shares realised, by giving him credit in reduction of the damages for the increased prices in fact realised over the market price at the 30th December, the date of the breach. The appellant contends that this is wrong.

Their Lordships will first deal with the contractual term as to re-sale. Upon breach by the purchaser his contractual right to the shares fell to the ground. There arose a right to damages, and the stipulation in question was in their Lordships' opinion only a stipulation that the seller might, if he thought fit, liquidate the damages by ascertaining the value of the shares at the date of the breach by an auction sale as specified. If the seller availed himself of that option he was not selling the purchaser's shares with a consequential obligation to account to him for the price, but was selling shares belonging to the seller which the purchaser ought to, but failed to, take up and pay for in order to ascertain what was the loss arising by reason of the purchaser not completing at the contract price. Their Lordships are unable to agree with the original Judge that the plaintiff's letters of the 30th December and 2nd January amounted to an election to take a measure of damages to be arrived at by a re-sale. Moreover, there never was any sale by auction under the option. Nothing turns upon this provision as to re-sale.

The question, therefore, is the general question and may be stated thus: In a contract for sale of negotiable securities, is the measure of damages for breach the difference between the contract price and the market price at the date of the breach—with an obligation on the part of the seller to mitigate the damages by getting the best price he can at the date of the breach—or is the seller bound to reduce the damages, if he can, by subsequent sales at better prices? If he is and if the purchaser is entitled to the benefit of subsequent sales, it must also be true that he must bear the burden of subsequent losses. The latter proposition is in their Lordships' opinion impossible, and the former is equally unsound. If the seller holds on to the shares after the breach, the speculation as to the way the market will subsequently go is the speculation of the seller, not of the buyer, the seller cannot recover from the buyer the loss below the market price at the date of the breach if the market falls, nor is he liable to the purchaser for the profit if the market rises.

It is undoubted law that a plaintiff who sues for damages owes the duty of taking all reasonable steps to mitigate the loss consequent upon the breach and cannot claim as damages any sum which is due to his own neglect. But the loss to be ascertained is the loss at the date of the breach. If at that date the plaintiff could do something or did something which mitigated the damage, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of it. Staniforth v. Lyall (5) is an illustration of this. But the fact that by reason of the loss of the contract which the defendant has failed to perform the plaintiff obtains the benefit of another contract which is of value to him, does not entitle the defendant to the benefit of the latter contract. Yates v. Whyte (7), Bradburn v. Great Western Railway (8) and Jebson v. East and West India Dock Co. (9).

The decision in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3), that market value at the date of the breach is the decisive element, was upheld in the House of Lords in Williams Brothers v. Ed. T. Agius Limited (2). The breach in Rodocanachi v. Milburn (3) was breach by the seller to deliver, but in their Lordships' opinion the proposition is equally true where the breach is committed by the buyer.

The respondents further contend that sections 73 and 107 of the Indian Contract Act, or one of them, is in their favour. As regards section 107 their Lordships are unable to see that it has any application in the present case. It deals with cases in which a seller has a lien on goods or has stopped them in transitu. The section follows upon sections dealing with those subject-matters. The present case is not one which falls under either of those heads. The seller was and remained the legal holder of the shares.

As regards section 73 it is but declaratory of the right to damages which has been discussed in the course of this judgment.

Their Lordships find that upon the appeal the Officiating Chief Judge rested his judgment on a finding that the seller reduced his loss by selling the shares at a higher price than obtained at the date of the breach. This begs the question by assuming that loss means loss generally, not loss at the date of the breach. The seller's loss at the date of the breach was and remained the difference between contract price and market price at that date. When the buyer committed this breach the seller remained entitled to the shares, and became entitled to damages such as the law allows. The first of these two properties, viz., the shares, he kept for a time and subsequently sold them in a rising market. His pocket received benefit, but his loss at the date of the breach remained unaffected.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal ought to be allowed, and the orders in the original Court and in the Appeal Court discharged, and judgment entered for the plaintiff according to his plaint, and that the respondents ought to pay the costs in the Courts below and of this appeal.

Letters Patent Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Walmsley, dated the 5th December 1913, arising from difference of opinion between Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Walmsley, in Appeal from Original Decree No. 510 of 1908, against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, of Gaya, dated the 10th June 1908.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. The following is the supplementary judgment of N. R. Chatterjea, J., on the question as to the form of the decree to be drawn up in the case:—

"This is an application on behalf of the appellant praying that a decree may be drawn up in the above appeal in accordance with the provisions of section 36 of the Letters Patent under the following circumstances.

The appeal was heard by me sitting with Mr. Justice Walmsley. There was a difference of opinion between us. I was of opinion that the suit and the appeal should be decreed in full, while Walmsley, J., was of opinion that the decree of the Court below should be reversed only to a small extent. The appeal having turned entirely on questions of fact no reference could be made under the proviso to section 98 of the Code. Then the question arose as to the decree to be prepared on the judgments. There was no time for having the question argued fully as it was on the 4th September, the last day of sitting of the Court before the vacation, and Mr. Justice Walmsley was to cease to be a Judge of this Court from the next day.

Under these circumstances, we intimated that no decree would be prepared and that the parties might take such steps as they thought proper. On the re-opening of the Court after the vacation the present application was made on behalf of the appellant on the 19th November and the parties have since been heard in the matter.

An objection was raised on behalf of the respondent that I have no power to hear the application and that an order having been made both by Walmsley, J., and myself that no decree would be prepared, I alone have no power to decide whether any and what decree should be drawn up. But the note made by the Bench Clerk that no decree will be prepared was made by him for the information of the office, which I understand does not receive a judgment without a decree. The note was not signed by Walmsley, J., nor by me. However that may be, every judgment must be followed by a decree and an order made by Walmsley, J., and myself can be set aside on an application for review by me sitting alone now that Walmsley, J., has ceased to be a Judge of this Court. It is true the present application is not in terms an application for review, but it was filed within the period allowed for an application for review and bears the proper Court-fee. Under the circumstances, the application may be treated as an application for review of the order. I am accordingly of opinion that I have got the power to hear this application and that I ought to direct a decree to be drawn up.

Then the question is, how is the decree to be drawn up on the judgment in this case. Section 98 of the Civil Procedure Code provides that when an appeal is heard by a Bench of two or more Judges, the appeal shall be decided in accordance with the opinion of such Judges or of the majority (if any) of such Judges and where there is no such majority which concurs in a judgment varying or reversing the decree appealed from, such decree shall be affirmed. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that whereas in the present case the appeal is heard by a Bench of two Judges and one Judge is for reversing the decree of the Court below in its entirety and the other is for varying it, there is and there can be no majority concurring in a judgment varying or reversing the decree appealed from, and that such a case is not contemplated by section 95 of the Code. It is also contended that section 37 of the Letters Patent is superseded by section 98 of the Code only where the provisions of the latter section are applicable and that section 33 of the Letters Patent is applicable to cases not provided for by section 98 of the Code. There can be no doubt that section 36 of the Letters Patent would be applicable to cases not provided for by section 98 of the Code, but section 98 is the only section dealing with appeals and I am of opinion that it applies to a case like the present. The effect of the first two paragraphs of section 98 seems to be this. Where there are two Judges and they agree, the decision shall be in accordance with their opinion. Where there are more than two Judges and there is a difference of opinion among them, the decision shall be according to the opinion of the majority, for instance, in a Bench consisting of three Judges where two are of one opinion and the third is of a different opinion. Where the Judges of a Bench consisting of four Judges are equally divided in opinion, there is no majority and in such a case, the decree of the Court below shall be confirmed. Similarly it seems to me that in a case of two Judges being equally divided in opinion, there cannot be any majority and in such a case also the decree of the Court below should be confirmed, in other words, in all cases where there is or can be no majority, the decree of the Court below should be confirmed. But this would be the result where one of the Judges is for reversing or varying the decree and the other for entirely confirming the decree of the Court below. Where, however, one of the Judges is for reversing the decree of the Court below in its entirety and the other for reversing it to some extent (as in the present case), I think the decree of the Court below cannot be entirely confirmed. There may be cases where one of the two Judges is of opinion that the decree of the Court below should be entirely reversed and the other may be of opinion that it should be reversed to the extent of 15/16ths. Again in a case heard by a Bench of three Judges, one of the Judges may be of opinion that the decree should be reversed in its entirety, the second Judge may be of opinion that it should be reversed to the extent of one-half and the third to the extent of 1/4th only. In these cases, the decree of the Court below cannot, I think, be entirely confirmed. Such cases seem to fall under the first paragraph of section 98 of the Code, and in the illustrations put above, the two Judges, having agreed to the extent of 15/16ths and the three Judges having agreed to the extent of 1/4th, it may be said that there was concurrence to that extent and the decree of the Court below should be reversed or varied accordingly.

There is no decided case on the point. In the case of Gossami Sri Girdharji v. Romanlalji Gossami (1), the judgment of the Judge in accordance with that of the Court below prevailed. But in that case although the senior Judge was for reversing the decree of the Court below to some extent, the other Judge was of opinion that the decree of the Court below should be entirely confirmed. That case, therefore, does not cover the present. The construction I have placed on the section would meet such a case as the present and seems to me to be a reasonable construction. I am accordingly of opinion that the decree of the Court below should be reversed to the extent to which both Mr. Justice Walmsley and I were agreed that it should be reversed. The plaintiff's title to 1-anna 6-dams 5-cowris share of the property in dispute will be declared and he will recover possession to the extent of the said share. The rest of the plaintiff's claim will be dismissed. Each party will bear his own costs in both Courts; that having been the opinion of both of us, let a decree be prepared accordingly."

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This suit was instituted by Mohunt Krishna Doyal Gir against Irshad Ali Khan and Ali Nabi, and by the plaint a declaration is sought that the plaintiff is owner of 13 annas of Haria asli mai dakhili, Pargana Shergati under kobalas dated the 21st February 1888 and 21st February 1889, and under an ijara of 12th March 1889 and a kibala of the 25th July 1904 is owner of 1 anna 6 dams and 5 corris and ijaradar of 1 anna 13 dams 15 corris. In other words, he seeks to establish his present right to 16 annas in one capacity or the other and on the strength of this he prays that his possession of the 16 annas may be confirmed or restored to him. This suit was heard by the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Gaya, by whom it was dismissed. The appeal was heard by N. Chatterjea and Walmsley, JJ., who agreed so far that they passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour to the extent of the 1 anna 6 dams 5 corris. But as to the rest they were at variance, for while Chatterjea, J., was for decreeing the plaintiff's claim in its entirety, Walmsley, J., was for disallowing the rest of his claim. A decree was accordingly drawn up and signed in accordance with the view of Walmsley, J. The plaintiff has appealed from so much of the decree as is not in accordance with the concurrent judgments of both the learned judges. Certain preliminary objections were overruled and we have heard the case on the merits.

In Pargana Shergati, Zilla Gaya, there is a taluka named Khaira which belonged in equal shares to Nabi Bukhsh Khan and Mohammed Bukhsh Khan.

On the death of Nabi Bukhsh his 8 annas admittedly devolved or was treated as having devolved as to 5 annas on his daughter Hussaini Bibi and as to 3 annas on Mohammed Bukhsh and his children. It is common ground that the 8 annas of Mohammed in certain villages forming a part of Taluka Khaira passed to the plaintiff under the sale deed of the 21st February 1888, that the 5 annas of Hussaini so passed under the sale-deed of the 21st February 1889, and that the remaining 3 annas passed for a limited interest under the ijara of the 12th March 1889. The plaintiff maintains that among the villages that so passed to him was Harya Manar. This the defendant Irshad Ali Khan contests, and this dispute is the question involved in this litigation. Irshad Ali Khan claims to be the owner of Haria Manar by virtue of a revenue sale to the defendant Ali Nabi as his benamdar, and it is not disputed that he acquired this property unless the plaintiff is able to make good his claim that the property was assured to him and that it was included in the separate account opened in the name of his benamdar, Bishendhari.

First then I will deal with the question whether Haria Manar did or did not pass to the plaintiff.

This has been treated in the discussion before us as dependant on the true construction of the sale-deeds of 21st February 1888 and 1889. The parcels are described in the first of these two deeds as follows:—

"8 annas out of 16 annas of each of the Mouzahs, Chuahar, Majhar, Dangrajaribigha, Mairakhap and Jaigir Harya, Pargana Shergati, District Gaya, appertaining to Taluk Khaira mai with hamlets Chuck, Chukukats, Tola, and Majra known by distinct names or otherwise the tonzi number and jumma sundar whereof are given below in the thakbust map prepared by the compass which has up to date been held and possessed by me without the co-partnership of or interference by any one else." And then there follow general words that may for the present purpose be disregarded. Then at the foot of the deeds are these words:—"Mortgaged properties 8 annas out of 16 annas of each of the Mouzahs (1) Chuahar, (2) Majhar, (3) Dangrajaribigha, (4) Mariakhap, and (5) Jaigir Harya mai with hamlets, Chucks and Chakukats, known by distinct names or otherwise, Tolas and Majras appertaining to Taluka Khaira, Pargana Shergati, District Gaya." Then there is this: "Property sold—eight annas out of 16 annas of each of the Mouzahs Chuahar, Majhar, Dangrajaribigha, Mairakhap and Jaigir Harya appertaining to Taluk Khaira, Pargana Shergati, District Gaya."

The only other matter to which I need refer is the recital of a prior mortgage of "shares of Mouzah Jaigir Harya." Much the same sort of description is to be found in Musammât Hussaini Bibi's sale-deed of the 31st July 1839. There is a recital of negotiations for the sale of 5 annas out of the entire 16 annas of Jaigir Harya and of shares of certain mouzahs.

This is followed by a description of the parcels in the operative part of the sale-deed in these terms: "5 annas out of the entire 16 annas of Mouzah Jaigir Harya" and so forth. In the description of the property sold at the foot of the instrument is "Five annas out of the entire 16 annas of Mouzah Jaigir Harya", and so forth. Under the heading of Government Revenue of the property sold is written "Jaigir Harya, Rs. 33-15", and the description of the property at foot is "Five annas of Mouza Jaigir Harya." What then is it that passed under the description "Mouza Jaigir Harya?" To answer this it is necessary first to go back to the Revenue Survey of 1843-44. There we find two separate maps, one of Jaigir and the other of Harya. In these maps each is treated as a mouza, Harya lying to the north and Jaigir to the south.

The full name of Harya according to the map is Harya Bank Unair Churwadee Choor. Its area is shown as 786 a. 3r. 22p. The village is described as not inhabited and of the land only 100 bighas were cultivated, the rest being jungle. The area of Jaigir in its map is given as 3356, of which 400 bighas are said to be cultivated. The village is described as inhabited. In the Mahalwar Register we find grouped together Jaigir Harya, Soonwar Mai zamin Pirtabal, and Pukureah zamin Churadih Chardaha suoni hissa as one unit with an area of 4,515a.-1r. 3p. The composition of this area has become apparent in the course of the discussion before us. Separate maps of Soonwar and Pukureah have been produced by the respondents in which the areas of these two items are shown as 253 and 119 acres respectively and it is thus that the area of 4,516 acres is reached. In a word, then, this is what appears from an examination of the Survey proceedings. Four separate maps are given of Jaigir Harya, Soonwar and Pukureah and to this extent they are treated as 4 distinct mouzahs. But it further appears that in the Mahalwar Register they were grouped together as a single composite unit having a single area of 4,516 acres, a figure which corresponds with the sum of the areas of the several items Jaigir Harya, Soonwar and Pukureah. Though Jaigir and Harya are contiguous Soonwar and Pukureah are at some distance away from them, the one lying to the north-west and the other to the south-west of Jaigir Harya.

And it may be observed of these last two that as things stood at the survey, Jaigir was the more important by reason of its larger area and its being inhabited. So far then as the survey materials go they lend themselves to the idea that the expression Jaigir Harya would mean the two items of the composite unit bearing those names, Harya being in the nature of an appanage to Jaigir, the paramount member of the group.

This brings me to certain registration proceedings. On the 26th April 1877 an application was preferred by Mohammed Bukhs Khan for registration and mutation of names. One of the items there mentioned is "Jaigir Harya Soonwar Bang zamin Chowaddih 8 annas—Pukureah Chardaha zamin Partapi 8 annas." On this the record-keeper on the 27th August 1878 submitted his report, stating that the under-mentioned areas were recorded with separate areas. Among these mouzahs was "Jaigir Harya Soorbang zamin Partapi Pukureah zamin Jorwadih Khurd 1/6th share 4516a. 1r. 3p."

On the 21th of July 1878 a joint hissawari petition was presented in which Jaigir and Harya Monwar main zamin were separately described and it was followed by the Land Registration decree of the 28th April 1879 in which Mouzah Jaigir and Mouzah Harya Monwar are shown. On the 12th March 1886 Musammât Hussaini Bibi presented a petition for opening a separate account.

Among the items in the Schedule to her petition is the following:

KRISHNEN DOYAL GIR F. IRSHAD ALI KHAN.

"Mouza Jaigir Harya, Soorbang zamin Partapi Pukureah zamin of Chorwadib." The Government Revenue of the entire 16 annas is stated to be Rs. 108 odd and the applicants' proportionate share Rs. 33-15, while the area is described as 4,516a. 1r. 3p. This statement of the Government Revenue agrees with the description in Musammatal Hussaini Bibi's sale-deed while the area includes Harya as well as Jaigir. Moreover it is inconceivable that the application should not have extended to Harya, and yet it only did so if Harya be included in the description "Mouzah Jaigir Harya." On the 10th July 1888, after the purchase from Mohammad Bukhsh, Bishendhari Gir applied for registration. The name of the monza's is given as Jaigir Harya. The record-keeper's report is that to Mahal Khaira appertained: "Mouzah Jaigir Harya Monwar together with zamin and other monzaks."

The order to the record-keeper dated 31st December 1888 directed entries to be made and the entry as to the proprietary right and share was "8 annas of Mouzah Jaigir Harya Monwar together with zamin," a description that appears twice in the Schedule to the order.

On the 7th June 1889, after the purchase from Musammatal Hussaini, Bishendhari Gir again applied for registration and mutation of name. There the description is "Mouzah Jaigir Harya" which is repeated by the record-keeper. In a decree of the 9th September 1889 the specification of interest is "5 annas each Jaigir Harya Dangrajaribigha, &c." In an amended petition of 16th January 1890 the description is Jaigir Harya Monwar together with erazi. The sadar jama is given as Rs. 100 odd but the description of the proportionate area is obviously erroneous, and does not tally with the entire area which is correctly described. The error can probably be traced to a misplaced reproduction of what is shown in Hussaini Bibi's petition.

On the 5th June 1890 it was ordered that separate accounts be opened. This was done after the record-keeper had reported that the petition fulfilled the requirements of section 70 and that the proportionate amounts of Government Revenue as stated by the petitioner were correct. The sadar jama of the joint share was reported to be Rs. 3,333-15-0, and that represents the difference between the Rs. 1,043-5-0 shown in Hussaini Bibi's petition as her proportionate share of Government Revenue and the sadar jama of Rs. 4,437-40 shown in the endorsement on the back of that petition.

On the 5th August 1893 Bishendhari Gir preferred a petition for the inclusion of Rs. 1,020-13, the nizamat for the separated share of Musammatal Hussaini Bibi and others, in the imlali share and the description there given is "Mouzah Jaigir Harya."

Then there are the Registers of 1902. They are not the originals but transcripts and their value as throwing light on the problem before us is materially discounted by their manifest inaccuracy.

Thus this Collectorate Register gives 79 acres as the area of Jaigir and 4,516 acres as that of Harya though it is known that these areas were 3,356 and 786 acres respectively. Moreover we further know that 4,516 acres was the area of the composite unit Jaigir Harya, Soorbang and Pakureah. Another instance of hopeless error in this new register is furnished by the area attributed to Kahudag.

In view of these matters I am not disposed to place any great reliance on the fact that in this register there is separate mention of Jaigir Harya Manar and Harya Manar, or to regard it as materially assisting the defendant's case. And I am the more confirmed in this view by the obvious and surer indication of the contents of these earlier registers afforded by the several reports of the record-keepers to which I have alluded. The original registers are not forthcoming for they have been destroyed.

In the proclamation of the 28th April 1904, Jaigir Harya Manar 3 annas is named and Harya Manar including the land 16 annas, and the same descriptions are found in the plaintiff's sale certificate of the 22nd September 1904. But they do not appear to me to add anything to the strength of the case against the plaintiff in view of the earlier matters that I have narrated. If they were taken from the erroneous register as is surmised, the error gains nothing by repetition.

A stronger circumstance, however, in the defendant's favour is to be found in certain execution proceedings to which I will now allude. A suit on a mortgage had been instituted by one Baijnath Singh and others against Mohammed Bukhsh and others, of whom Bishendhari Gir was one, for the mortgage and suit included among other things the properties purchased by him. The suit ended in a compromise under which the properties purchased by Bishendhari were exempted from the operation of the mortgage and the decree was limited to the rest of the properties then in suit. Subsequently, Mohant Krishna Doyal Gir, the plaintiff in this suit, obtained an assignment and on the 4th of September 1907 applied for execution of the mortgage-decree. In his application he included among other items a 9 and odd annas share of Harya Manar maizamin notwithstanding the exemption.

This is not unreasonably claimed by the defendant as an admission that the exemption did not extend to Harya though it did to Jaigir, and that it is in form such an admission must, I think, be conceded. But the value in fact of that which is in form an admission, must depend on the surrounding circumstances; and though we have no explanation from the witness-box of how Harya came to be included in this application of the 4th September 1907, it is significant that the plaint in the present suit which specifically and exclusively contends that Harya had passed to the plaintiff under the sale-deeds, was filed only two days later, on the 6th September 1907. One may speculate as to the explanation, and wonder whether the inclusion of Harya in the execution application was due to a lack of care or an excess of caution, to an oversight or to a prudent design to have a second string to the Mohant's bow, but the materials before the Court do not permit of any sure conclusion as to this. A comparison, however, of the dates to my mind is destructive of the idea that the execution proceedings amounted to any abandonment of the position asserted by the plaintiff in this suit, or can be regarded as any real admission that Harya had not passed to the plaintiff. At its worst it is an indiscretion. But it is not enough for the plaintiff to show that Harya was assured to him: he must show a separate account in his favour. The Court's decision on this must be largely dependent on the view it may form as to the title. If title is not shown almost of necessity there could be no separate account. But if title be shown, there would in the circumstances of this case be a strong bias in favour of a separate account.

I have already described the plaintiff's applications for separate registration in discussing what it was that passed to him. From those proceedings it is apparent that the applications and the orders thereon were appropriate and should have resulted in the separate registration sought and directed. It is, however, contended that the actual entries made related only to Jaigir and not to Harya, and in support of this the defendant points more particularly to the heading "Harya Manar" in the register and the absence of any entry in the plaintiff's favour. But as I have already pointed out, this register does not purport to be more than a transcript of the register in which the original entries were made and is patently incorrect.

And apart from that, even in this register the heading under which the plaintiff's name is entered is village Jaigir Harya Manar, and were it not for the later entry "Village Harya Manar maizamin" it could hardly be doubted that the first heading referred to Harya as well as Jaigir and was the appropriate place for making the entries directed. How this later entry came to be made does not clearly appear, though it may be easy to guess. But this at any rate seems clear, that it was not made until 1904 and an examination of the original register shows it was made after the entry of Jaigir Harya Manar. There is oral evidence as to Jaigir being popularly known as Jaigir Harya, but it is far from convincing and cannot be regarded as of the same value as the documentary evidence. This was fully recognized in the presentation of his case by the learned and experienced Vakil who represented the defendant. And after all is said and done the salient fact

The conclusion to which I come is that the opening of a separate account in respect both of Harya and Jaigir was sought and directed, and that this was intended to be carried out and in fact was carried out by opening an account with the heading "Jaigir Harya Manar" or some such composite title. Therefore I hold that the plaintiff has established title to Harya and a separate account commensurate with his title.

I have so far dealt with the title under the two kobalas of February 1888 and 1889 and not with that under the ijara. And in view of the defendant's admission before us I need not discuss this ijara and its operation, for it was conceded by the Vakil for the respondent that the title under the ijara would follow that under the kobalas. In fact the ijara title was in no way discussed by him.

The next point made by the defendant is that the suit is barred by limitation inasmuch as it was not brought within 12 years of the plaintiff's dispossession.

This is essentially a case where the Court's view of possession would naturally be influenced by its view as to title. As the Subordinate Judge and Walmsley, J., thought title had not been established, it followed almost as of course that they considered possession not proved having regard to the circumstances of the case. Chatterjea, J., having come to a different conclusion as to title, differed naturally as to possession. And at this point I would digress for the purpose of pointing out that the parties placed much more ample materials before Chatterjea, J., and Walmsley, J., than before the Subordinate Judge and of this we have reaped the benefit.

There were proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and it was there held that though the present plaintiff's men realized rent from the village down to the dasahra of 1901, the defendant was in possession at the commencement of the proceedings under section 145. This is the dispossession of which the plaintiff complains.

The position as to possession is a simple one. The defendant does not, and indeed cannot, suggest that he was in possession before his purchase, and that was well within the period of 12 years prior to the institution of this suit. At the same time there is absolutely no evidence that Mohammad Bukhsh and Hussaini were in possession during the period subsequent to the plaintiff's purchase. Such evidence as there is supports the plaintiff's possession and in the view I take this is in accordance with the title.

The Subordinate Judge and Walmsley, J., ascribe much value to the absence of Harya tenants from the plaintiff's side, but they seem to overlook that in the circumstances this was in accordance with their interest.

On the other hand it is, I think, a just and shrewd remark of Chatterjea, J., that the admitted absence of a cutchery at Harya Manar for collection of rent is far more important than the evidence of any number of witnesses. And I must say that the evidence of witnesses, who would account for the absence of their rent receipts by the action of the high winds, is not calculated to inspire confidence.

As a final point the defendant suggested that the suit should have been for setting aside the sale and if so framed, it would have been far beyond the statutory period of limitation. And in this connection Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (2) was cited to us. But the argument overlooked or disregarded the fundamental distinction between the circumstances of that case and of this, and in particular failed to notice that if, as I hold, the plaintiff has made out his title to any separate account there was no arrear in respect of Harya and no condition justifying a sale.

The result then is that in my opinion the decree of Walmsley, J., should be modified and a decree passed in the plaintiff's favour declaring his title as prayed and establishing his possession. The defendant must pay the costs of the suit and appeals including the costs of, and incidental to, the Collectorate, documents being brought to this Court for

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery or confirmation of possession of land on declaration of title thereto under three conveyances, dated 21st February 1888, 21st February 1889 and 25th July 1904, and a usufructuary mortgage dated 12th March 1889. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove his title and possession. On appeal to this Court, Mr. Justice N. Chatterjea held that the plaintiff had proved his title and possession and was entitled to a decree in full. Mr. Justice Walmsley held, on the other hand, that the plaintiff had proved his title by purchase to the extent of 1-anna 6-dams 5-cowris share only under the conveyance of the 25th July 1904, and was entitled to a decree in respect thereof. These judgments were delivered on the 4th September 1913. On the 5th December 1913, Mr. Justice Chatterjea directed that a decree be drawn up to the effect that the plaintiff do recover possession of 1-anna, 6-dams, 5-cowris share (as to which both the Judges were agreed that the decision of the primary Court was erroneous), and that the suit do stand dismissed as to the remainder of the claim. On the 22nd December 1913, the plaintiff preferred the present appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent. When this appeal came on for hearing on the 29th April last, two preliminary points were raised, one on behalf of the respondent, the other on behalf of the appellant. These objections were overruled as untenable. The respondent contended that the appeal had been lodged out of time, as the memorandum had been presented after the expiry of thirty days (the period prescribed in this behalf by the rules of the Court) from the date of the delivery of the judgments, and reference was made to the decisions in In the matter of the petition of Huruck Singh (3) and Huruck Singh v. Toolsee Ram Sahoo (4). There is plainly no substance in this contention. The term 'judgment' as used in clause 15 of the Letters Patent signifies what is now understood by the term 'decree' or 'order.' The decree in the present case was not drawn up till the 5th December 1913, and the appeal was lodged within thirty days from that date. In any event, this is clearly a case where the Court should, in the exercise of its discretion, extend the period for presentation of the appeal. There is consequently no substance in the preliminary objection taken by the respondent. The preliminary point raised by the appellant turned out on examination to be equally illusory. The appellant contended that the decree should have been drawn up in accordance with the judgment of the senior Judge, and referred to the decisions of Husni Begam v. Collector of Mazaffarnagar (5) and Jehangir v. Secretary of State (6). There is no foundation for this argument. The Judges of the Division Bench were agreed that the decree of the Subordinate Judge was erroneous in respect of the share covered by the conveyance of the 25th July 1904. With regard to this share, the decree was thus bound to be reversed under sub-section (1) of section 98, Civil Procedure Code. In respect of the remaining share, the Judges were equally divided in opinion; Mr. Justice Chatterjea thought that the decree should be reversed while Mr. Justice Walmsley thought that the decree should be affirmed. Consequently there was no majority in favour of a reversal of the decree, and to this extent, the decree was bound to be confirmed under sub-section (2) of section 98, Civil Procedure Code, Appaji Shivrao v. Shirlal Khubchand (7), Sri Gridharaji Maharaj Tickait v. Purushottam (8), Lala Suraja Prasad v. Golab Chand (9), Ashutosh Roy v. Harinarain Singh (10), Devchand v. Hirachand (11), Keshav Pandurang v. Vinayak Hari (12), Bammidi Bayya Naidu v. Bammidi Paradesi Naidu (13). There was thus no room for the application of clause 36 of the Letters Patent and it follows that the decree has been correctly drawn up. But from another point of view, the objection taken by the appellant is unsubstantial. Even if it were well founded and we directed that a decree be drawn up in accordance with the judgment of the senior Judge, the defendant would forthwith appeal from such decree, and on such appeal, the merits of the controversy would require examination. There is thus no escape ultimately from an investigation of the question in dispute between the parties—and that question in substance is, whether, under the deeds mentioned, the plaintiff purchased only one village Jaigir or two villages Jaigir and Harya and had these included in a separate account opened at his instance under the provisions of the Revenue Sale Law.

The history of the title alleged by the plaintiff may be briefly narrated. On the 21st February 1888, the plaintiff purchased from Mahomed Bux, one of the admitted proprietors of the disputed property, an eight-annas share in Jaigir Harya. On the 21st February 1889, he purchased a five-annas share from Hussaini Bibi, another admitted proprietor. On the 12th March 1889, he took a usufructuary mortgage of three-annas share from Mahomed Bux, who acted in this transaction for himself and on behalf of his infant children, who, it is not disputed, were jointly interested in that share. There were then proceedings before the Revenue Authorities for registration of the name of the plaintiff and the separation of the share acquired by him; to these reference will presently be made. On the 30th May 1904, the residuary share of the estate was sold for arrears of revenue and was purchased by the defendant in the name of Ali Nabi. On the 25th July 1904, the plaintiff purchased from Ali Nabi 1-anna 6-dums 5-cowris share of Jaigir and Harya, and with reference to this share, Chatterjea and Walmsley, JJ., have agreed that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. No further reference need be made to this share, as there is not and could not have been an appeal by the defendant. The questions in controversy now are, first, whether the plaintiff has, under the other transactions mentioned, acquired a good title to 13-annas share as proprietor, and to 1-anna 13-dums 15-cowris share as usufructuary mortgagee, of both Jaigir and Harya, as the plaintiff asserts, or of Jaigir alone as the defendant contends; and, secondly, whether, if the first question is answered in favour of the plaintiff, his share of Harya was constituted into a separate account as he maintains or remained merged in the residuary share as the defendant alleges.

To determine what the vendors and mortgagors of the plaintiff intended to transfer and did transfer to him in 1888 and 1889, we must look to the deeds themselves. The description given there may be compendiously stated as Mouzah 'Jaigir Harya.' To ascertain the meaning of this expression, we must look back to the antecedent transactions in respect of Jaigir and Harya. We have in the first place the Revenue Survey Maps of 1843-44 when the mouzas comprised in Pergana Shergati were surveyed and delineated by Sherwill. We find that at that time there were two mouzas, Jaigir and Harya; the latter lay towards the north of the former. Jaigir was an inhabited village and comprised 3,356 acres (equal to 5,370 bighas); only 400 bighas were cultivated and the rest were described as hill and jungle. Harya was uninhabited; its area was 726 acres (equal to 1,269 bighas); only 100 bighas were under cultivation, the remainder was jungle. There is nothing to indicate that Mouzah Jaigir was at that time known by the appellation Jaigir Harya; on the other hand, the map of Harya shows that the southern portion thereof was in different parts known by different local names, Bank Unair Churwadee, Choor, which all appear on the map of Jaigir and in the heading of the map of Harya. We next have proceedings before the Revenue Authorities after the Land Registration Act of 1876 had come into operation. The application by Mahomed Bux for registration of his name, made on the 26th April 1877, treats Jaigir and Harya as distinct mouzas; but it is noteworthy that these two mouzas are linked with two others, namely, Sowa Bank and Pakuria and the aggregate area of the four mouzas is stated to be 4,516 acres. This has been verified before us and found correct on a reference to the Survey Maps of Sowa Bank (or Soobang) and Pakuria; the approximate areas of the four villages are 3,356, 786, 253 and 119 acres respectively. No explanation is available at this distance of time as to how the four mouzahs came to be linked together; what had transpired between 1843 and 1877 is absolutely unknown. Two of these villages, namely, Jaigir and Harya, are contiguous to each other and may be deemed to lie between one set of boundaries; the other two, however, were distinct and separate parcels situated at some distance, one to the north-west, the other to the south-west. But whatever the history of the matter may be, the fact remains that in 1877 Jaigir and Harya were treated as distinct mouzahs, though they were linked for revenue purposes with two other villages. The order for registration made by the Collector on the 25th April 1879 was in accord with the petition and shows Mouzah Harya separately from Mouzah Jaigir. We have not on the record the corresponding application and order for registration in respect of the share of Hussaini Bibi, but we have an application by her, dated the 12th March 1886, for amendment of mistakes in her petition for separate account; this application recites that errors had crept into the registration decree. In this application, the four mouzahs already mentioned are linked together and boundaries are given as if they were all comprised within the same set of boundaries—which we now know is not a fact. It may be observed also that the northern boundary of Mouzah Jaigir Harya as given in this petition is at first sight misleading as it is stated to be Harna Chuk. No Harna Chuk is shown on the map of Jaigir at any portion of its northern boundary, but the word Chuk appears on the boundary to the north-west in the map of Mouzah Harya. Whether the northern boundary as given in the petition refers to this Chuk may be a matter for speculation; but this much is clear that the Harya Chuk mentioned as the northern boundary is not Harya. All doubt on this point is removed by an examination of the original; what is given as the northern boundary is either Harya Chuk or Harna Chuk while the mouzah whereof the boundary is specified is Jaigir Harya. This petition consequently lends no support to the theory that Mouzah Jaigir Harya meant Mouzah Jaigir alone and that towards the north of it lay Harya. Apart from this and irrespective of mistakes which may have been made in the application for separate account, it is indisputable that the description Mouzah Jaigir Harya could not have been intended to mean Mouzah Jaigir alone, for the area is stated to be 4,516 acres which is the area of all the four villages and not of three alone. Consequently, the order of the Collector dated 24th September 1886 that separate accounts be opened, admits of one interpretation only, namely, that the separate account should include not Jaigir alone but both Jaigir and Harya. We have now reached a point of time when the transactions with the plaintiff commenced. The conveyance of the 21st February 1888 describes the property as Jaigir Harya; this, in the light of what had proceeded, must be taken prima facie to mean both Jaigir and Harya, and the same interpretation must be placed upon the application of the purchaser, made on the 10th July 1888, for registration of his name. The order of the Collector dated 31st December 1888 is consistent with this view. We have next the conveyance by Hussaini Bibi dated 21st February 1889, which, taken along with her application to the Collector in 1886 and the order thereon, must be deemed to cover both Jaigir and Harya. A different effect cannot be attributed to the application of the purchaser made on the 7th June 1889 for registration of his name and the order thereon by the Collector dated 9th September 1889. It is needless to dwell at length on the usufructuary mortgage of the 12th March 1889, because, it is conceded, that it must be taken in the same sense as that ascribed to the conveyances. There comes next the application of the plaintiff dated 15th January 1890 to open a separate account. The statement of area comprised in the share of the applicant is incorrect and appears to have been copied out from the previous applications of Hussaini Bibi dated 12th March 1886 and 21st February 1889. But it is plain that the plaintiff intended to apply in respect of both Jaigir and Harya and that the order for separate account was made accordingly. A suggestion was faintly put forward that the revenue for the separate account was not correctly calculated; no foundation has been laid in the evidence to support this assertion, nor can the question be raised at this stage.

by the defendant, who under section 54 of Act XI of 1859 has not acquired any rights which were not possessed by the previous owners of the residuary share purchased by him. The distribution of revenue was made after notice to all the proprietors and they did not challenge the order of the Collector by way of appeal to the superior Revenue Authorities or otherwise. The result was that the order for separate account was made and has been given effect to ever since the 5th June 1890. On the 5th August 1893, the plaintiff found that the separate account of Hussaini Bibi must be closed; he himself had acquired shares both out of the separate account and the residuary estate, and after his share had been constituted into a separate account, what remained in the separate account of Hussaini Bibi had to be thrown back into the residuary estate. This was done accordingly on the 21st July 1894. What then was the position of the parties at that time? The plaintiff had, by successive transactions, become the proprietor and the mortgagee of both Jaigir and Harya; on this point, I cannot, on the deeds and on an examination of the history of the title to the property, entertain reasonable doubt. This view is strengthened by the entries in the Mahalwar and Mouzawar Registers, and by the hissawari petition signed by all the proprietors and presented to the Collector on the 24th July 1878 in the proceeding by Mahomed Bux for registration of his name. Against all these documents which converge to a conclusion in favour of the plaintiff, we have oral evidence of an unreliable and inconclusive character adduced by the defendant to show that Jaigir was popularly known as Jaigir Harya while Harya was known by its own special name. But the case for the defendant is founded really on what are called the Intermediate Register and the D. Register, which it is said show two distinct mouzahs, namely, Mouza Jaigir Harya Manar and Mouzah Harya Manar; the former, it is contended, includes Mouzah Jaigir only and the latter Mouzah Harya; the plaintiff is registered in respect of the former but not with regard to the latter. This D Register is unreliable and contains grave errors; it is not the original register, but a copy prepared so late as 1900 from vernacular records which have now been destroyed. The contents of the original papers are unknown, but it is clear that they must have contained entries different from what we find in the present register. The proceedings before the Revenue Authorities from 1877 onwards, particularly the registration decrees and the orders for separate accounts were presumably carried out in the Collectorate. The result of those proceedings is entirely inconsistent with the D. Register as it now stands. No trace can be found in those proceedings or orders that Mouzah Jaigir was called Jaigir Harya and that Harya was again separately called by its own name. It would not be right to hold that this register supersedes and nullifies the effect of the long series of proceedings before the Revenue Authorities, specially when we find that it contains serious errors the origin of which cannot be explained. For instance, the statement of area of what is called Jaigir Harya and Harya is in each case entirely wrong; in the former instance, it is 79 acres; in the latter case, it is 4,516 acres which is the area of the four villages previously mentioned. A similar error has been discovered in respect of at least one other mouzah; the register shows that Kahudag comprises only 201 acres while the survey map shows its area as 2,009 acres. The truth obviously is that the first entry in the register, namely, Mouzah Jaigir Harya includes both Jaigir and Harya, and that the much later entry about Harya alone must be ignored; how and when the second entry came to be made has been left wholly unexplained. Much stress has also been laid on behalf of the defendant upon an application for execution of a mortgage decree made by the plaintiff two days before the institution of this suit. The plaintiff made this application as assignee of a decree obtained on the 11th August 1896 by one Baijnath against Mahomed Bux on foot of a mortgage dated 16th March 1887. The Schedule to the mortgage included all the mouzahs of Taluk Khaira, which admittedly comprises the disputed property. The plaintiff in his application for sale of the mortgaged properties mentioned Harya. On this circumstance the argument is based that Harya could not have belonged to the plaintiff. This contention is fallacious; the fact when taken most strongly against the plaintiff amounts to a statement apparently in conflict with his present claim; how it came to be made, has not been explained in evidence and one is left to speculate whether it was made by oversight, possibly reproduced from a previous application by the decree-holder or whether it was made deliberately as an ultimate resource in the event of failure of this suit. Whatever the real explanation may be, the statement does not amount to abandonment of his rights by the plaintiff and does not negative the effect of the other evidence on the record. It consequently follows that the predecessors of the plaintiff owned both Jaagir and Harya, that they intended to transfer and did transfer both the properties to him, and that at his instance, the mouzah was included in a separate account distinct from the residuary share purchased by the defendant at the sale for arrears of revenue. But it has been argued on behalf of the defendant that even if this view be well founded, it was obligatory upon the plaintiff to have the sale set aside within one year from the date thereof, as the proclamation under section 7 of Act XI of 1859 and the sale-certificate granted on the 22nd September 1904 show, that the Collector intended to sell and did sell the disputed property. Reliance has in this connection been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (2). This argument is clearly fallacious. No doubt, section 33 of Act XI of 1859 applies not only where the sale has been irregularly conducted but also where the sale has been illegal as held in contravention of an express provision for exemption. But this principle has no application where the property sold is not in arrear; the existence of an arrear is a condition precedent to the exercise of statutory authority by the Collector: Balkishen Das v. Simpson (14); Harkhoo Singh v. Bunsidhur Singh (15); Jogendra Mohan Sen v. Uma Nath Guha (16); Mahomed Jan v. Ganga Bishun Singh (17);

Ganga Pershad v. Irshad Ali (18); Hamid Hossein v. Mukhlum Raza (19); Indramani Das v. Priyanath Chakravarti (20). In the case before us, Mouzah Harya was not in arrear, as it formed no part of the residuary estate. If the officers in the Collectorate erroneously supposed that Harya was comprised in the residuary estate and under this impression, exposed it for sale, the sale was clearly beyond the statutory authority vested in the Collector and could not prejudice the right of the plaintiff.

The question of possession finally requires consideration for the determination of the question of limitation. The case is clearly within the scope of Article 142 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. The plaintiff must prove that he was in possession within 12 years of the institution of the suit. He relies upon a statement, in an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, made on the 9th December 1905 in a proceeding between him and the defendant, to the effect that he was dispossessed in September 1904. This finding in the order of the Criminal Court is not admissible, though the order itself is admissible for a limited purpose, namely, to show the parties in dispute, the land in dispute and the person declared entitled to retain possession, as explained by Lord Lindley in Dinomoni Chowdhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhurani (21). We are accordingly thrown back upon the oral evidence of possession. Here we have oath against oath. The witnesses for the plaintiff seek to prove his possession down to 1904. The defendant does not allege that he was in possession before his title accrued by purchase at the revenue sale in 1904. Consequently we have to see whether the plaintiff was in possession as he asserts or his vendors and mortgagors were in wrongful possession. There is no evidence to show that they had such possession. They had admittedly parted with Jaagir and delivered possession to the plaintiff; if thereafter they retained possession of Harya contrary to their deeds, they would presumably require a cutchery in Harya; there is no trace of such a collection office in that village. Stress has been laid on the fact that the tenants of Harya had not been called by the plaintiff; the answer is that they are now under the influence of the defendant, and it does seem probable, as suggested by the plaintiff, that these tenants have paid no rents to either of the claimants since the dispute broke out. I accept the evidence of the plaintiff that he was in possession till dispossessed by the defendant after the revenue sale of the residuary estate in 1904. The inference follows that the plaintiff has established his title and possession as set out in the plaint. The result is that this appeal must be allowed and the suit decreed with costs both here and in the Court below. The costs in this Court must include the costs of the two hearings and the cost of obtaining the additional evidence from the Collectorate.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33

An Appellate Court has power to add as party a person who was exonerated by the Court of first instance, but where there is already a memorandum of objections seeking to make him liable and the appeal is pending, the order making him a party is in its nature interlocutory, and a High Court will not interfere with the order in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. [p 978, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Nellore, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 104 of 1913, in Appeal Suit No. 53 of 1913.

Mr. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for Mr. S. Subramania Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Krishnaswamy Aiyangar, for Mr. T. Venkatarama Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The District Judge was clearly in error in relying on the case of Subramanian Chetty v. Veerabadran Chetty (1), which was decided under the old Code of Civil Procedure which did not contain provisions similar to those found in Order XLI, rule 33, introduced for the first time in the new Code. He was entitled, in order to promote the ends of justice, to make the 1st defendant a party respondent to the appeal and to pass a decree against him in favour of the plaintiff under Order XLI, rule 33, if the Court of first instance had erroneously exonerated the 1st defendant. See Jadunandan Prosad Singha v. Koer Kallyan Singh (2); Munisami Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (3) and Imbichunni Nair v. Narayana Nambudri (4).

But I do not think that this is a fit case for interference in revision against an interlocutory order passed in an appeal case, especially as the petitioner (the plaintiff) has filed a memorandum of objections in the lower Appellate Court against the 1st defendant and I am not at all sure that he cannot succeed in making the 1st defendant liable through the proceedings in the Appellate Court in connection with that memorandum of objections without making the 1st defendant a direct respondent in the appeal proceedings. It may well be argued (though I do not wish to give a final opinion on the question) that, as sub-rules (3) and (4) of Order XLI, rule 22, speak in very general language of a "party who may be affected by such objection" and of "notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit" and Order XLI, rule 22, does not confine itself to the appellants or the respondents mentioned in the appeal memorandum, any party to the suit and to the lower Court's decree who would be affected by the memorandum of objections, can be made a party to the said memorandum though he was not made a party in the appeal memorandum. Further, it might be reasonably expected that in view of the opinion expressed in the 1st portion of this judgment, the lower Court would be inclined to review its order refusing to make the 1st defendant a party to the appeal. I would, therefore, dismiss the petition presented under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There will be no order as to costs under the circumstances.

! Grove—Sale—Custom—Ejectment of vendee—"Land",

A custom by which a grove-holder can sell the grove, is not unusual, the sale carrying with it the right of occupation of the land. The vendee of such a grove is not liable to ejectment in the absence of proof that the sale of trees by the original tenant is a breach of the special terms on which the land is held for the purposes of a grove. [p. 979, col. 2.]

Per Reynolds, J. M.—A land let for the purpose of planting a grove on it and on which a grove is still in existence is not "land" within the meaning of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 981, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner of the Allahabad Division, dated the 1st April 1909, confirming that of the Assistant Collector, Allahabad District, in a case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

BAILLIE, S. M.—(May 16th, 1910.)—In a suit for the ejectment of a person who claimed occupancy rights it was held that occupancy rights had not under section 22 of the Tenancy Act descended to the defendant, the mother of the previous tenant, and that she was therefore, liable to ejectment as a tenant-at-will. Included in the area in suit were two groves which it was alleged, had been some time previously sold by the late occupancy tenant to two persons, who were added as defendants. The present application concerns only these two groves. The Commissioner relying upon Ram Sundar Koiri v. Jogi Khatik (1), held that as occupancy rights were not transferable, the sale of the groves to the added defendants, now appellants, was invalid and that the suit should, therefore, be decreed for the groves also. Ram Sundar Koiri v. Jogi Khatik (1), supports the view taken by the Commissioner only to this extent that a suit in regard to groves could be brought in a Rent Court. In the case of Ram Sundar Koiri v. Jogi Khatik (1), the plaintiff tenant-in-chief was the owner of the trees: the defendant had no rights in them other than as a lessee from year to year. The decision of the Commissioner is, therefore, not supported by Ram Sundar Koiri v. Jogi Khatik (1). The Commissioner has omitted to consider that the fact that the groves were planted by, and belonged to, the occupancy tenant who sold them, completely alters the case. The Customary Law on the subject was very fully and very ably discussed in Pandit Badri Prasad v. Bhim Sen (2) by Messrs. Reid and Kaye. It was there laid down that a grove-holder has rights altogether separate from, and independent of, those which he may enjoy as occupancy tenant under the Rent Act, that a grove-holder is customarily entitled to occupy the land so long as the groves continue to stand upon it. The grove-holder has this customary right whether he has occupancy rights or not.

It was also held that the custom by which a grove-holder can sell the grove, is not unusual, the sale carrying with it the right of occupation of the land and that a person to whom a grove, even though the sale was contrary to custom, had been sold, was not liable to ejectment by notice. The same principles apply to a suit for ejectment. In the case of a grove, it is not sufficient to allege that occupancy rights have determined. It is necessary to prove that the sale of the trees by the original tenant was a breach of the special terms on which the land was held for the purposes of a grove. There is no such evidence in the present case. The Commissioner's decision is in my opinion clearly wrong. The application is for revision, but I think the circumstances are such as to justify the revision being ordered. The Commissioner's order virtually confiscates the valuable property purchased by the appellants without there being on record any evidence whatsoever to show that the purchase by them was contrary to the terms of the tenure. I would, therefore, allow the present application and dismiss the suit in regard to the two groves Nos. 1723 and 1790. Applicant to get his costs throughout.

REYNOLDS, J. M.—In this case somewhat important considerations as to the rights of tenants and land-holders in grove lands and incidentally of the purchasers of those rights are involved.

The whole matter in the Province of Agra has become somewhat complicated, mainly on account of the ruling in Ram Sundar Koiri v. Jagi Khatik, which has been generally interpreted as having a far wider application than the Members who decided that case ever intended.

In that ruling, the previous decisions of the Board were all carefully reviewed and it is unnecessary to repeat the abstract that was given of those rulings by Mr. Darrah.

The important question is, how far do the general provisions of the Tenancy Act apply to grove lands, and the answer of this, depends entirely on the definition of land given in section 4 (2) of the Act, since, with but few exceptions, the provisions of that Act apply only to "land" so defined.

The definition is as follows:

"Land means land which is let or held for agricultural purposes". The use of the word "or" in "let or held" is important.

"Agricultural purposes", are nowhere defined in the Act but turning to Webster, I find that he defines "agricultural" as "pertaining to husbandry, tillage, or the culture of the earth". Husbandry he defines as "the business of a husbandman or farmer, comprehending the various branches of agriculture, tillage" and a "husbandman"

he says is "a farmer, a cultivator or tiller of the ground, one who labours in tillage," and finally, he defines tillage as "the operation, practice, or art of tilling or preparing land for seed and keeping the ground in a state favourable for the growth of crops."

Now these definitions clearly cover what in England is more usually known as "arable" and cannot apply to "orchards" which is the nearest English equivalent to the Indian "grove."

I have, therefore, no doubt in my own mind that when the framers of the Tenancy Act spoke of "land let or held for agricultural purposes", they intended to apply the term to arable land and land held for purposes subservient to its use as arable land, and not to grove land at all. I am confirmed in this view by the fact that in the very next definition of the word "rent" the Act says: "Rent means whatever is, in cash or kind, to be paid or delivered by a tenant for land held by him, or on account of groves, etc." Now if groves were land within the meaning of the previous definition, it is clear that there would be no need to add the words italicised, and put them in the same category with tanks, fisheries and such.

While, therefore, I am of opinion that grove land is not necessarily "land" within the definition, yet it is clear, that there are various classes of grove land and it is necessary to carefully discriminate these.

In the first place, land may have been let to a tenant for agricultural purposes, and he may have subsequently planted a grove on it.

Secondly, a grove may have been let to a tenant as grove and he may have cut down the trees and be using the land for agricultural purposes.

Thirdly, a grove may have been let to a tenant as a grove and it still retains its character.

In the first case, unless the landholder has given his consent either express or implied to the variation in the conditions of the letting, such land is still land which is let for agricultural purposes and is, therefore, "land" as defined in the

JAGDAMBA PRASAD V. BEHARI LAL.

Act. In the second case, the land is undoubtedly land which is held for agricultural purposes and is, therefore, "land" as defined in the Act.

In the third case, the land was neither let nor is it being held for agricultural purposes, and it is not, therefore, "land" within the definition and except for the purposes of suing for its "rent", no suit will lie with respect to such land in the Revenue Courts.

In the case of Ram Sundar Koiri v. Jogi Khatik (1) the Members were dealing with a grove falling under the first head only, and their ruling applies simply and solely to such land.

The question as to the status of land which had been let for the purpose of planting a grove on it, and on which a grove is still in existence, was not then and never has been hitherto formally considered by the Board since the passing of the Tenancy Act, but for the reasons given above I have no doubt that such land is not "land" within the meaning of the Act.

There remain two other cases to be considered.

Land may have been let to a tenant for agricultural purposes, and he may in accordance with local custom or with the written consent of the landholder have planted trees on it. This, all (except non-occupancy tenants) are entitled to do under section 88 of the Act. This planting of trees may or may not be an improvement within the definition of section 4 (12) (e) according as it fulfils the preliminary conditions laid down in the definition of 'improvement' or not. If, however, the planting of trees is done under a local custom, or with the consent of the landholder, this will, I think, form the basis of a fresh contract, express or implied, as to that particular land, and as the land is no longer let and held for agricultural purposes, it will no longer be land as defined in the Act.

If a tenant plants trees on land which has been let to him for agricultural purposes without the consent of his landlord and in the absence of any local custom authorising him to do so, it is difficult to see how he could claim compensation on ejection under section 90, but such cases might conceivably occur and certainly section 92 (c), would apply in the case of all tenants who had been wrongly ejected by their landholder if the grove planted by them were an "improvement."

There is another case relating to grove lands, which is not of unfrequent occurrence, where the tenant sells merely the trees standing on the land.

Each such case will have to be decided separately on the merits, if the tenant who sold the trees, subsequently lose his right to the land on which the trees are planted. It is conceivable that the trees may, in certain cases, accede to the soil, and where a tenant's rights are extinguished under section 18 or otherwise, the trees may revert with the land to the landholder; or on the other hand, the transfer of the trees may be a valid one and the vendee's rights in the trees may remain, in spite of the fact that the vendor's right to the land has since been extinguished. Each such case must be decided on issues fixed to elicit the facts.

In the case now before us, it is true that the grove land has been recorded by the patwari with other fields as part and parcel of an occupancy holding, but this entry is not necessarily correct, the trees are admittedly old, and as there is nothing to show that the land was originally let solely for agricultural purposes, I think the land occupied by these trees, is not "land" within the definition. In dealing, therefore, with such land, the Commissioner has exercised a jurisdiction which was not vested in him by law and I concur, therefore, for the reasons given by me in the order proposed by my colleague. Even if this be "land" within the definition, it is clear that the tenant sold the trees many years ago and no steps have been since taken by the landholder to have that sale set aside, and until this is done, it appears to me that the purchaser is entitled to those trees and to have access to them and in passing the order he has done, the Commissioner has, to all intents and purposes, set aside the sale and given an injunction prohibiting the vendee from having that free access to them which he has hitherto exercised. This again only a Civil Court can do and on this alternative ground also, the Commissioner's order should be set aside, as being without jurisdiction, and the suit dismissed as to Nos. 1723 and 1790.

Easements Act (I of 1882), s. 47—Right of Government to claim water cess for water flowing through pattah land—Classification of bed as poramboke, if essential—Right to easement as against Government, when and how required—Burden of proof.

Water flowing in a continuous manner through a rill, kuttai and another water-course may form a natural stream in which easement rights may be acquired as against Government.

Once the existence of an easement is proved as against Government, it is for Government to show under section 47 of the Easements Act that it interrupted that easement more than 20 years ago or that the plaintiff rendered its use impossible. Mere failure on the plaintiff's part to repair the breach would not amount to obstruction by the servient owner or rendering the use impossible by the dominant owner.

If the Government wish to claim right to water which flows through pattah land, they can do it only when they classify the bed separately as poramboke, otherwise the bed also remains the property of the ryot.

Second appeal against the decrees of the District Court of Salem, in Appeal Suits Nos. 34 and 37 of 1912, preferred against the decree of the Additional District Munsif of Salem, in Original Suit No. 145 of 1911.

FACTS.—This was a suit by the plaintiff to declare that he was not liable to pay water cess in respect of water which collected on the land held by him on pattah from Government. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit on the ground that water belongs to Government and the plaintiff should pay water cess.

Hence this second appeal preferred against that decree.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant's own case is that there was, however, an old kuttai or pond fed by two rills. There is now another water-course issuing out of the pond, and the defendant now claims that the rills, the kuttai and the other water-course form a natural stream. If this be so, the evidence clearly points to the plaintiff having acquired an easement to interrupt the flow through the pond by bunding it up so as to store the water. The pond has a stone revetment and even the written statement says that the water which flowed from the pond, flowed through a breach in the kuttai or, as the evidence shows, through a breach in the stone revetment. Once the easement is shown, it is for Government to show under section 47 of the Easements Act that it interrupted that easement more than 20 years ago or that the plaintiff rendered its use impossible, and that has not been done. Mere failure on the plaintiff's part to repair the breach would not amount to obstruction by the servient owner or rendering the use impossible by the dominant owner.

As to the claim to levy water cess, these rills run through the plaintiff's pattah land, and their beds have not been separately demarcated as poramboke; they are part of the pattah land and not the property of Government, and, therefore, the water-course cannot be said to belong to Government as decided day before yesterday in Appeal Suit No. 113 of 1910 (on the file of the High Court).

The appeal must be allowed and the suit decreed as claimed, except as regards the cess for fasli 1318, with costs throughout.

The time for payment will be three months from this date.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter, Babus Sorushi Charan Mitter, Sailendra Nath Palit and Ajendra Nath Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga dismissing their suit.

The plaintiffs are the sons of one Kesab Misser deceased. Kesab was step-brother of Madhab, the father of the defendants third party. The defendant No. 1 is the widow of and the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 the daughters of Nunoo Pershad Misser who died on the 18th of Baisakh 1313. Nunoo also left him surviving a son Nages-war Pershad. He died childless on the 24th Bhadro 1313.

The plaint in this suit alleges that on the death of Nunoo, his son Nageswar succeeded to his properties and that on the death of Nageswar his mother, the defendant No. 1, took the properties. Further, that the defendant No. 1 wishing to benefit her daughters, the defendants Nos. 2 to 5, caused a false Will of Nunoo to be filed before the District Judge of Darbhanga by her daughters and that in that case, Madhab Misser at the instigation of the defendants Nos. 8 and 9 (who are alleged to be servants of the defendant No. 1) filed a fictitious objection which was rejected by the Judge. That the servants of the defendant No. 1 knew full well (the word is given in the translation of the plaint as "probably" but this must be a mistranslation) that the Will was invalid; so with a view to establish a permanent title in future got a Suit No. 277 of 1907 instituted by Madhab for declaring the said Will (of which Letters of Administration with the Will annexed had been already granted) declared invalid. That with a view to deprive the plaintiffs of their rights, the parties to that suit entered into a fraudulent and collusive solenama under which the immoveable properties described in the Schedule (i) to the plaint and forming a portion of the estate of Nageswar Pershad Misser, were given to Madhab, the properties described in the Schedule (ii) to the defendants second party, and the properties described in the Schedule (iii) to the defendants fourth party.

The plaintiffs further allege that the defendant No. 1 was won over and on the 25th of June 1909, executed a deed of relinquishment and that the defendant No. 1 is still in possession of the properties of Nageswar.

On these allegations, the plaintiffs asked the Court to make a declaration that the solenama and bainama are invalid, null and void and are not binding on the plaintiffs and cannot prejudice their right of inheritance.

The learned Judge at the trial found that all the transactions challenged by the plaintiffs in their plaint as being fraudulent lent, were in fact made and done in good faith.

On opening this appeal before us, Sir S. P. Sinha, Counsel for the appellants, stated that he did not intend to challenge the findings of the learned Judge negating fraud. That being so, it is open to doubt whether the appeal should not be dismissed on that ground. The claim of the plaintiffs to relief in this suit, rests solely on the allegations of fraud made in the plaint. The plaintiffs having failed to establish fraud, are not at liberty to pick out allegations in the plaint which might have warranted them in asking for relief on some other ground. [Hickson v. Lombard (1) and Rajendra Kumar Bose v. Gangaram Roy (2).]

The material facts relating to the case when they are disentangled from the allegations of fraud and collusion, are simple. The deceased Nunoo Pershad Misser made his Will, dated the 2nd of April 1906, which was registered two days later.

Under the terms of the Will, Nunoo gave the whole of his estate to his only son Nageswar subject to certain bequests in favour of his daughters and other relatives. The widow, the defendant No. 1, took no interest under the Will.

By clause 6 of his Will, the testator provides that if Nageswar died without issue, his four daughters should succeed to his estate. As I have already said, Nageswar died shortly after the testator, a minor and without ever having had any issue. The learned Judge has observed in the course of his judgment that "it is clear that Chondhury Nunoo Pershad had no right to make this Will while he and his son lived in a joint family."

The learned Judge, however, overlooked the fact that the testator states in his Will "I have many moveable and immoveable properties, both ancestral and self-acquired and it is necessary to give to the said daughters and their heirs, something out of the said properties according to the custom of the family." There was also evidence before the learned Judge that the testator was possessed of self-acquired properties. A person claiming under the

Will, if acting in good faith, might not unreasonably suppose that there were properties of the testator which passed under the terms of his Will. Next the three adult daughters of Nunoo applied to the District Judge for grant of Letters of Administration with the Will annexed. This application was opposed by Madhab Misser who was then the sole reversionary heir. A perusal of the order-sheet of the learned District Judge, shows that his opposition was genuine and strenuous. The Letters of Administration were issued to the three adult daughters of the testator on the 3rd of October 1907.

On the 11th of August 1907, that is, before the grant of the Letters of Administration, Madhab instituted a regular suit asking for a declaration that Nageswar took the whole of the properties on the death of Nunoo by right of survivorship and alternatively if Nageswar came into possession of the properties under the Will, for a declaration that Nageswar took an absolute interest under the terms of the Will. This suit came on for trial and after the trial had proceeded for several days, the parties came to a settlement.

On the 22nd of February 1909, the parties filed the petition of compromise in Court and on the next day, the suit was decreed in terms of the compromise.

By the compromise, the property was dealt with as follows:—

(a) The whole of the properties were deemed to be the estate of Nageswar.

(b) The moveable properties were declared to be the absolute property of the defendant No. 1.

(c) The defendant No. 1 relinquished in favour of Madhab her widow's estate in the whole of the immoveable property.

(d) Madhab granted to the daughters of Nunoo half of the immoveable properties.

(e) Madhab granted to the defendant No. 1 50 bighas of land for her life with remainder to Madhab and his heirs. Similarly, the daughters of Nunoo granted to the defendant No. 1 another 50 bighas with remainder to the daughters and their heirs.

The other terms of the compromise are no material and have not been referred to on the hearing of this appeal. The terms of the compromise have been given effect to by deeds executed by and between the parties.

The sole argument addressed to us on behalf of the appellants turned on the question as to whether or not the compromise was valid and binding.

The cases dealing with the power of a Hindu widow or mother to deal with the estate of her deceased husband or son to which she has succeeded as heiress, are numerous. It is not necessary for us to go through the long list of authorities as they have all been considered by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (3). In that case, all the earlier authorities were reviewed. First, it may be taken as established without doubt that a Hindu widow may relinquish her estate and this will have the effect of accelerating the estate of the next reversioner. Further, an alienation by a Hindu widow will be valid where there was a consent of the next heirs and the alienation is capable of being supported by reference to the theory of relinquishment and consequent acceleration of the interest of the consenting heirs. But the alienation in such a case must be of the whole of the estate.

The authorities, however, appear to show that the widow is not precluded from obtaining a benefit for relinquishing her estate. As was observed by Garth, C. J., in the case of Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (4): "But there is no concealing the fact that although such a relinquishment may be made by a widow in perfect good faith, and even under such circumstances, as to be a meritorious self-sacrifice, it is nevertheless possible and, indeed, it not unfrequently happens that a widow who is anxious to turn her husband's estate into money, may arrange with the next heir of her husband for the time being, to alienate the estate to some third person for their mutual benefit. They may both share in the profits of such a transaction; and it sometimes happens, that in this way, the estate is alienated from the husband's family, so that the person who would be the next male heir at the widow's death, is virtually deprived of his rights. But, if it is once established, as a matter of law, that a widow may relinquish her estate in favour of her husband's heir for the time being, it seems impossible to prevent any alienation, which the widow and the next heir may thus agree to make. And it seems equally impossible to deny, that for a long series of years, this Court has treated and considered such alienation as lawful." The latter part of this statement was approved of by the Privy Council in the case of Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (5). In the present case, the compromise was challenged on the following grounds:—

First, it was said that the deed of relinquishment (Exhibit H) executed by the defendant No. 1 pursuant to the terms of the compromise, does not include a house at Nadat. But the learned Subordinate Judge remarks that there is no evidence to support this argument. It is further to be observed that Exhibit H was intended to apply to the whole of the immoveable properties and in the Schedule there is mentioned a property at Nadat which may be the house that is alleged to be there.

Next, it was objected that the whole of the moveable properties had been given to the defendant No. 1. But under the Mithila Law, the widow takes an absolute interest in the moveables [Birajun Koer v. Luchmi Narain Mahata (6)]. A further point was raised under this head, namely, that the defendant No. 1 was given absolutely the mortgage-bonds. It was argued that under the terms of the Transfer of Property Act, a mortgage is immoveable property. But even if that be so, the Transfer of Property Act does not regulate the right of a Hindu widow or mother to succeed to the estate of her deceased husband or son. Under the Hindu Law, as under the English Law, a mortgage is treated as personal or moveable property, the land being considered as merely a pledge or security for the money lent. Further, it is to be noticed that in the 4th Schedule to the plaint

the plaintiffs treat the mortgages as moveable property, the two decrees mentioned in the 4th Schedule being decrees on mortgages. The clause of the compromise that was most strongly relied on, was clause 6 under which Madhab and the daughters of Nunoo respectively undertook to give to the defendant No. 1 50 bighas of land. It is argued that under this clause, the widow's estate in a portion of the property remained. This, however, in my opinion, is not so. In one case the 50 bighas were given to the defendant No. 1 for her life with remainder to Madhab and his heirs and in the other case, it was given to the defendant No. 1 for life with remainder to the daughters of Nunoo and their heirs. This can in no way be considered as a reservation or restoration of the widow's estate that the defendant No. 1 formerly enjoyed in the property. The life-estate in the 100 bighas is essentially different from the widow's estate which the defendant No. 1 formerly enjoyed. For example, if a case of legal necessity arose, the defendant No. 1 would not be at liberty to mortgage the 100 bighas and the course of succession thereto would be different to what it would have been if the defendant No. 1 had retained her estate as a Hindu widow.

I think that under the terms of the compromise and the deed of relinquishment (Exhibit H), the defendant No. 1 effectually relinquished and destroyed her estate as a Hindu widow. That being so, having regard to the decisions mentioned above, the parties were at liberty to make any bargain they thought fit for the division of the property.

I may further mention that I consider that the compromise might be supported as a family arrangement between all the parties competent to deal with the whole of the property, namely, the daughters who claimed under the Will on the one hand and the defendant No. 1 and Madhab, the sole reversioner, on the other hand. On the principles laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Khunni Lal v. Kanwar Gobind Krishna Narain (7), the compromise in this case would be binding as acknowledging and defining the antecedent title in the parties.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33—Appellate Court, whether can reverse decree against non-appealing defendant.

In a suit on a mortgage-deed, separate decrees were passed against the 1st defendant and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The plaintiff appealed against the decree in so far as it exonerated defendants Nos. 2 and 3 from liability for a portion of the claim, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 filed cross-objections, but the 1st defendant did not appeal. The Appellate Court, however, dismissed the suit as against all defendants. On second appeal by the plaintiff:

Held, that as the memorandum of cross-objections by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not proceed on any ground common to them and the 1st defendant and as the 1st defendant did not appeal, the District Judge was not justified in interfering with the decree against him. [p. 987, col. 1.]

Rangan Lal v. Jhanda, 11 Ind. Cas. 640; 8 A. L. J. 1111; 34 A. 32, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 83 of 1913, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 396 of 1911.

FACTS.—Plaintiff was a mortgagee. He brought a suit for sale on a mortgage executed by the 1st defendant alleging himself to be a major and as guardian of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (minors). The 1st defendant was ex parte. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 pleaded that defendant No. 1 and themselves were minors and the mortgage document by him was void as against all of them. The District Munsif found the 1st defendant was a major on the date of execution of the mortgage and passed a decree against him for the full amount, and as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for a portion of the mortgage amount. Plaintiff then appealed against the decree disallowing the claim as against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 filed a memorandum of objections. The District Judge on appeal found the 1st defendant also to be a minor, reversed the decree against all and dismissed the suit altogether. The present appeal is against that decree.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The District Munsif passed separate decrees against the 1st defendant and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The 1st defendant did not appeal against this decree. The plaintiff appealed against the decree in so far as it exonerated defendants Nos. 2 and 3 from liability for a portion of the claim. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 filed a memorandum of objections. The District Judge held that the 1st defendant was a minor at the time that the mortgage document was executed and dismissed the suit altogether. We are unable to uphold the decree. The memorandum of objections by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not proceed on any ground common to them and to the 1st defendant. Consequently as the 1st defendant did not appeal, the decree became final against him. The District Judge was not justified in interfering with the decree against him under Order XLI, rule 33 of the Civil Procedure Code, vide Rangam Lal v. Jhandu (1). In so far as the suit is decreed against him, we must reverse the decree. The plaintiff contended in his appeal that although defendants Nos. 2 and 3 might have been minors, they were represented by a guardian and the debt is binding on them. The District Judge has not dealt with this aspect of the case. We must reverse the decree of the District Judge and remand the appeal to him for disposal on the merits. The costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

JUDGMENT.—The facts connected with the litigation out of which these appeals arise, may be stated as follows—

KHAGENDRA NATH V. SONATAN GUHA.

The lands in dispute are included in a permanent tenure called Taluk Kamdeb Guha appertaining to the zemindari mahal No. 2694 belonging to the plaintiff-appellant. The taluk was sold in execution of a rent decree and purchased by one Ganga Charan in 1864, who sold it to four persons, Ramsagar, Gokul, Krishnapriya and Chandrakala, who were members of the Guha family to whom the taluk belonged before the sale under the rent-decree. The first three mortgaged a 14-annas 4-gundas share of the taluk to certain persons who sued and obtained a decree upon the mortgage and one Chandra Kumar Bose ostensibly purchased the said share at the sale held in execution of the said decree, but it has been found that Chandra Kumar was the benamdar of the said mortgagors. The fourth purchaser from Ganga Charan, viz., Chandrakala, appears to have had a 1-anna 16-gundas share in the taluk, which on her death devolved on her three sons in equal shares, two of whom Ananda and Iswar mortgaged their 1-anna 4-gundas share to one Kashinath, whose successors-in-interest (who are described in these cases as the Chakravartis and the Kanjibalis) purchased the said share at a sale held on the 1st June 1888 in execution of a decree obtained upon the said mortgage. These Chakravartis and Kanjibalis deposited the landlord's fee as required by section 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act but it was not accepted by the plaintiff, as Iswar and Ananda whose interest they purchased or their mother had not got their names registered in the plaintiff's sherista. It appears that out of the four persons named above who purchased the taluk from Ganga Charan in 1864, only Ramsagar and Gokul got their names registered in the landlord's sherista and it was from them that the landlord used to realise rent for the tenure amicably or by suit. After the death of Ramsagar and Gokul, the landlord in 1889 brought a suit for rent against the four sons of Ramsagar and the widow of Gokul and the taluk having been sold in execution of the decree was purchased by one Chandra Kumar Chakravarti on the 17th March 1890. Then another decree was obtained for rent in 1890 for the period prior to the said sale. When execution of this decree was taken out, a mortgage (kistibandi) bond was executed by Chandra Kumar Chakravarti, Dinamani (widow of Gokul) and by three other persons who were members of the Guha family, viz., Rasik, Sonatan and Amar, in which it was stated that Chandra Kumar Chakravarti was the real owner of the taluk by purchase. From that time, the zemindar sued Chandra Kumar alone for rent, the last suit being No. 2767 of 1893. At the sale in execution of the decree passed in that suit, the taluk was purchased by one Manitora on the 29th April 1895. By this time, the zemindar suspected that Chandra Kumar and Manitora were benamdars for the Guhas, and in the next two rent suits Nos. 1572 of 1895 and No. 1574 of 1895, he joined the four sons of Ramsagar and the widow of Gokul (who were the defendants Nos. 4 to 8 in that suit), and Rasik, Sonatan and Amar who had joined Chandra Kumar in the kistibandi mortgage-bond and were made defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the 9th defendant in the 1st suit being the said Chandra Kumar and the 9th defendant in the second being Manitora. The defence of the first eight defendants in those two rent suits was that defendants Nos. 4 to 8 (the heirs of Ramsagar and Gokul) were the real owners of the taluk, that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had no interest therein and that the defendant No. 9 Chandra Kumar in the first suit and defendant No. 9 Manitora in the second, were the real auction-purchasers and decrees for rent should be passed against the said purchasers in each suit. The Court, however, found that Chandra Kumar and Manitora were benamdars, that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had no interest in the taluk and that defendants Nos. 4 to 8 were the real owners of the taluk, and accordingly passed decrees against them. In execution of the decree in suit No. 152 of 1895, the taluk was sold and purchased by the zemindar decree-holder on the 20th June 1898 and he obtained delivery of possession through Court on the 29th July 1899. The judgment-debtors applied to have the sale set aside, but the application was dismissed and the order of dismissal upheld up to this Court. On the plaintiff attempting to take khas possession, the judgment-debtors set up several under-tenures and notices under section 167 of the Bengal

KHAGENDRA NATH D. SONATAN GUHA.

Tenancy Act were thereupon served upon them and the plaintiff instituted several suits for recovery of possession.

In three cases, it was found that the notices were not served within the time allowed by law and with respect to those three, the plaintiff instituted three rent suits which gave rise to Second Appeals Nos. 3625 to 3627. In the other two cases, the notices were served in proper time and they were for possession of the lands in respect of which the defendants had set up under-tenures.

The defence of the defendants, so far as it is necessary to state for the purpose of the present appeals, substantially was that as some of the owners of the taluk, viz., the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis, were not made parties to the rent suit of 1895, the decree cannot operate as a decree for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act and the sale held in execution of such a decree could not pass the taluk free of incumbrances, and the under-tenures held by the defendants, therefore, were not affected by the sale.

These two suits (which gave rise to Second Appeals Nos. 3524 and 2902) were decreed by the Munsif, but on appeal, the suits were dismissed; on second appeal (Second Appeal No. 2719 of 1914) the cases were remanded to the lower Court and that Court again decreed the suits. There were again second appeals (Second Appeals No. 2627 of 1907 and analogous appeals) and this Court was of opinion that if the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis had any subsisting interest at the date of the institution of the rent suit in 1895, the suits must be dismissed, but if they had no subsisting interest at that time, the suits must be decreed, and the Court below was directed to determine the said question.

On remand, the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis had a subsisting interest in the taluk at the date of the rent suit, and accordingly dismissed the suits. The Second Appeals Nos. 3624 and 2902 have been preferred by the plaintiffs against the said decision.

The question for consideration in these appeals, therefore, is whether the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis had any subsisting interest at the date of the rent suit in 1895.

As regards the question of possession of the 1-anna 4 gundas share, the learned Subordinate Judge said: "were it necessary to come to a decision on this point, I would have unhesitatingly held that the Guhas were all along in possession of the land, that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis never received rent from them and that evidence of payment of rent to and grant of dakhilas by the latter is concoction, pure and simple, to defeat the claim of the plaintiffs," but he was of opinion that as there was no conveyance by the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis in favour of Iswar and Ananda, nor possession for the statutory period by the latter, the former were not divested of their right and no title was created in favour of the latter. But his findings as to whether the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis relinquished their right on receipt of the decretal amount, was not clear and definite. We accordingly remanded the case for a definite finding on the point. The finding has now been returned to this Court and the Court below has clearly found that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis relinquished the share purchased by them on receipt of the decretal amount from the Guhas. As stated above, the Court below was of opinion that notwithstanding that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis disclaimed their title to and possession of, the share purchased by them, the Guhas could not have acquired any title to the share for want of a registered conveyance and relied upon the case of Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (1).

We think that the Court below is wrong in the view it took of the legal effect of the relinquishment in the present cases. It is true, a mere admission or disclaimer cannot operate to pass title to property where a conveyance is required under the law to transfer title. In the case relied upon, there was a release executed by the real owner in favour of another person in order to protect his property from the claims of his creditors. The nominal transferee sold a portion of the property to another. The creditors were not defrauded and it was held that the real owner could recover the property from the benamdar and the transferee from him. There is an observation of Mookerjee, J., that the title of the real owner could not pass by an admission. But in that case, the original transferee and the purchaser from him, were found not to be bona fide purchasers for value, and they were fully aware of the real nature of the transaction. It was under these circumstances, that Mookerjee, J., observed that title could not pass by a mere admission. In the case of Musammam Oodey Koonur v. Musammam Ladoo (2), in a suit to redeem a mortgage of an estate A, in order to avoid an objection taken as to parties, filed a petition disclaiming all interest in the estate. The Judicial Committee held that in the circumstances and in the absence of any consideration given to A, the petition did not operate as a conveyance of A's right or as an estoppel to a suit by her for possession of the estate. Mookerjee, J., relied upon that case and observed that although under certain circumstances a person may be estopped from setting up a title in himself, title of the real owner could not pass by mere admission. The opinion expressed in that case was followed by Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., in Dharam Chand Roid v. Mouji Shahu (3). There a partnership business was sought to be transferred by means of a deed of release. It does not appear that any consideration was paid or that there were circumstances which would in equity have precluded the transferor from challenging the validity of the transfer.

In the present case, the matter did not rest upon a mere admission. The Chakravartis and Kanjibalis on receipt of consideration gave up their rights as purchaser in favour of the Guhas and it is found that the former never took possession and the latter were allowed to remain in possession of the property. There is no doubt that the Guhas could sue the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis for specific performance. They could have successfully resisted a suit by the latter if they sued the Guhas for possession of the share. It is contended on behalf of the respondents, that under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act and section 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there can be no transfer except by a registered conveyance. But the equitable principle is well-established and we need only refer to Walsh v. Lonsdale (4) and Puchha Lal v. Kunj Behary Lal (5), decided by Jenkins, C. J., and Mookerjee, J. In the latter case, a purchaser under an unregistered conveyance paid the agreed price to his vendor and was placed in possession, and it was held that in the absence of circumstances showing that such purchaser was not entitled to sue his vendor for specific performance, a subsequent purchaser of the property under a registered conveyance could not succeed in a suit to recover possession of the property from the former purchaser. Coxe, J., relied upon the provisions of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act and was of opinion that the transaction was a nullity and that the vendor himself was not estopped from disputing the validity of the transaction. He was, however, overruled by the Court of Appeal, and Jenkins, C. J., observed:—"There is no invasion or evasion of the Registration Act. It is merely securing a party those rights to which he is entitled apart from the Act—rights to which he has a good title in Courts to which the abiding direction has been given to proceed in all cases according to equity and good conscience."

In the recent case of Mohamed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (6), where by a compromise made in a suit in 1873, it was agreed that mortgaged property should be released from two mortgages, the malikana being thenceforth allotted in agreed proportions to the two mortgagees and the mortgagor, and that the latter should execute deeds of absolute sale or transfer of the proportions allotted to the respective mortgagees, a decree was made in pursuance of the compromise, but the compromise agreement was not registered, nor were the transfers executed. All parties, however, thenceforward acted in every respect as if the transfers had been made, and there were dealings both by the mortgagor and the mortgagees with the shares allotted to them under the agreement. In 1908, a suit was instituted to redeem the mortgages and it was held by the Judicial Committee:—

"That whatever defects of form there might be in relation to the compromise agreement as a transfer of the equity of redemption, were cured by the conduct of the parties in continuously acting upon it, and that the right to redeem the mortgages was extinguished." Their Lordships observed:—"The point which is made against giving effect to this compromise, is that a conveyance was not made by Khodajanessa in completion of the contract of purchase narrated in the razinama. This is true. But no written conveyance by the law of India was at the date of that transaction necessary, the Transfer of Property Act not being passed until the year 1882.

"But even if transfer in writing had from a conveyancing point of view been omitted, or if some other formal defect had occurred, their Lordships are of opinion that this would have been unavailing to the appellants in the attempt made in the present suit to redeem the mortgages. For the points against opening up the transaction, are manifold and are in their Lordships' opinion conclusive. The compromise has been acted upon by all the parties to it, and by their successors-in-title from that date to this." Then referring to the case of Maddison v. Alderson (7), their Lordships observed:—"Their Lordships do not think that there is anything either in the law of India or of England inconsistent with it, but, upon the contrary, that these laws follow the same rule. In a suit, said Lord Selborne in Maddison v. Alderson (7), founded on such part performance (and the part performance referred to was that of a parol contract concerning land) the defendant is really charged upon the equities resulting from the acts done in execution of the contract, and not (within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds) upon the contract itself. If such equities were excluded, injustice of a kind which the Statute cannot be thought to have had in contemplation, would follow."

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that all the cases where the above principles were applied were cases between parties claiming under the contract, that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis are no parties to these suits, and neither the plaintiffs nor the Guha defendants claim under them. But the plaintiffs purchased the tenure of which the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis were at some time part owners and they had given up their rights in favour of Iswar and Ananda, and the Guhas set up the rights of those persons as having had a subsisting interest in the taluk when the rent suit was brought. If the contention of the respondents were valid, a creditor cannot avail himself of any estoppel or equities to which his debtor is entitled. If the debtor paid the purchase-money for a property and the vendor delivered possession of the property to him, the creditor cannot according to the respondents' contention avail himself of the equities arising from the transaction. We do not think that this case can be distinguished in principle from the cases cited above; and we are of opinion that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis having given up their rights on receipt of consideration and allowed the Guhas to remain in possession of the 1-anna 4-gundas share, were precluded from setting up any title against the Guhas, and they had no subsisting right to the share at the date of the suit for rent. In the rent suits, the Guha defendants stated that they were the only owners of the taluk, but that their interest had passed to Chandra Kumar and Manitora who had purchased the taluk at sales held in execution of previous rent decrees. They did not say a word about the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis having any subsisting interest in the taluk. Kamini Chakravarti, the head of the Chakravartis, was examined in the rent suits, and he disclaimed all interest in the taluk. The Court found that Chandra Kumar and Manitora were *benamdar*s for the Guhas, and it was the Guhas (the defendants Nos. 4 to 8 in these suits) who were the real owners of the taluk and exclusively liable for rent, and it is they who now plead that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis had a subsisting interest at the date of the suit.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the question of relinquishment or estoppel was never raised before; the only question raised being whether the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis were benamidars and that the order of remand made by Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., precludes us from considering the said questions. We do not think that there is any substance in this contention. The plaintiffs did not allege in their plaint that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis were benamidars; it was the defendants who set up their title, and when Kamini Chakravarti was examined, the question of relinquishment was raised. The question of relinquishment was considered by the Munsif so far back as the 15th February 1907 in certain suits between the parties. The question of relinquishment and the equities arising from it are involved in the decision of the question whether the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis had any subsisting interest, which Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., by their remand order directed the lower Court to determine. It is contended that the only question for decision which the remand order contemplated was whether the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis were benamidars for the Guhas. But if they were benamidars for the Guhas, we fail to see how any question of their having a subsisting right, could arise. Then it is said that the learned Judges who remanded the case would have gone into the question of relinquishment and the other contentions founded upon it, had the question been raised before them. But the fact of relinquishment on receipt of consideration had not been found before the case was remanded, and in the absence of such a finding, the question of equitable considerations could not be gone into. Admittedly the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis did not execute any conveyance. The question whether their interest had determined otherwise than by execution of a conveyance for example, by relinquishment operating as estoppel or giving rise to equitable considerations was, therefore, involved in the order of remand and in no way inconsistent with it, and we do not see how we are precluded by the remand order from going into those questions when the remand order directed the Court below to decide the question whether the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis had any subsisting right at the date of the rent suit.

From what we have said above, it is clear that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis had no subsisting interest at the date of the rent suit and that their rights had vested in the Guhas. The suit for rent, therefore, was brought against proper parties and the sale held in execution of the rent-decree passed the entire taluk with power to annul incumbrances. Notices under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act having been served in the two title suits, the under-tenures set up by the Guhas, must be held to have been cancelled.

These two appeals (Appeals Nos. 3624 and 2902 of 1912) are accordingly decreed, the decrees of the Court of Appeal below are set aside and those of the Court of first instance are restored with costs here and in the Court below.

Appeals Nos. 3625, 3626 and 3627 arise out of three rent suits mentioned above. The lower Appellate Court gave a decree for rent in respect of only 14-annas and odd gundas share, but having regard to our finding that the Chakravartis and Kanjibalis had no subsisting right, the plaintiffs should get a decree for the entire rent and the decrees of the lower Appellate Court will be varied accordingly, the result being that the suits will be decreed in full with costs in all Courts.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 750 OF 1915.
November 10, 1915.

KIDHA SINGH—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 476, scope of—Sanction to prosecute—Prima facie case.

All that a Court granting sanction to prosecute under sections 195 and 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code for offences made punishable thereby, has to see is that a prima facie case has been made out upon the evidence before it for inquiring further into the question whether or no any of the offences punishable as set out in section 195, has or has not been made out. [p. 994, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Moradabad.

Mr. C. Dillon, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Moradabad, whereby he has granted sanction for the prosecution of one Kidha Singh under section 193 or section 465/114 of the Indian Penal Code. With reference to the prosecution, the learned Judge has in his judgment said: "In this case alternative charges under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and section 465/114 of the Indian Penal Code, may have to be framed. If the receipt was really written the same day as he sold the bullock, it was not written on December 9th the date it bears. Signing the receipt was fabricating false evidence or forgery." The ground on which I am asked to interfere in appeal with this order of sanction is "because the evidence given by the appellants on behalf of Jahana was inconclusive, and even if believed, was insufficient to secure his acquittal. It would be impossible to prove that their statements were demonstrably false, and there would, in consequence, be no conviction." I was referred in the course of the argument to what was said regarding this evidence by the Court before which the evidence was given. It appears that Jahana was on his trial for murder. He set up an alibi and in support of the alibi he secured the attendance amongst other persons of Kidha Singh. The alibi was to the effect that on the day in question, Kidha Singh along with Jahana was at a place called Phina and that he there purchased a bullock. The murder was committed at Dayalwala. The two places are far apart, and the argument is on the one side that Jahana could not have been on the day in question at Phina and then subsequently at Dayalwala. The argument on the other side is that it was possible even on the evidence, for Jahana to have caught a train and by means of that train to have arrived at Dayalwala just in time to commit the murder. Regarding this evidence, the learned Judge says: "The sale of the bullock was not registered or reported at the Thana and the receipt may well have been written long after December 9th. Even if Jahana ever did buy a bullock from Kidha Singh which I very much doubt there is no guarantee that the witnesses have not rolled up an old transaction that took place months ago and merely changed the dates. It is admitted that bullocks of the kind that Jahana says he wanted, can be got in many places in the district very much less remote than Phina, and it does not seem likely that Jahana and his friend would have wandered all over the district for a week and spent a lot of money in tonga and railway fares in order to buy a Rs. 65 bullock. In face of the overwhelming evidence on the other side to prove that Jahana was at Dayalwala on December 9th, I am quite unable to attach the slightest weight to this alibi and the evidence called to support it." The argument addressed to me is that sanction ought not to be granted when the evidence before the Court granting the sanction is such that the probable result will be acquittal. Scandal is caused if a prosecution of this nature results in acquittal. These arguments are based upon certain cases of the Calcutta High Court, namely, Ram Prosad Malla v. Raghubar Malla (1) and Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (2). With all due respect to the learned Judges who arrived at that conclusion, I find myself unable to agree with it. I cannot find either in section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or in section 476 of the same Code any phrase which would lead to this result. Reading the two sections together and having regard to paragraph (4) in section 195 and the words in section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure "when any Criminal Court is of opinion that there is ground for enquiring into an offence referred to in section 195 such Court after making such preliminary enquiry as may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the First Class," in my opinion, all that a Court granting sanction has to see is that a prima facie case has been made out upon the evidence before it for inquiring further into the question whether or no any of the offences punishable as set out in section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has or has not been made out. That question is still under inquiry. It is open to both sides to produce further evidence in support of or against it. In the present case, I do not pronounce any opinion on the value of the evidence which is on the record. I can quite see that the prosecution may be able to prove for instance that the train which left that day left at such a time and hour as to render it impossible for Jahana to have arrived at Dayalwala at the time mentioned. That by no means limits the possibility of what the prosecution may be able to put forward. It often happens that in this country cases, are started for the first time and without any warning to the prosecution of the nature of the evidence which the defence is about to put forward. Several cases by the late Mr. Justice Straight when he first came to this Court show how struck he was with this matter. Again the defence may be well able to show that Jahana left Phina at such a time as to enable him to reach Dayalwala before the murder was committed. All this is to be inquired into. When we have one learned Judge stating the result of his view that the evidence for the alibi is not entitled to the slightest weight and when we have another Judge coming to the same conclusion, it does seem to me that there is ample ground for enquiry, or to put it in another way that a prima facie case has been made out against Kidha

Singh. I do not wish it to be understood that I think a case has been made out which must necessarily lead to conviction. Far from that. But a cloud of suspicion has been raised and it will be in the interest of justice if it were dispersed and the truth arrived at as far as possible. For these reasons, I am unable to allow this appeal and I dismiss it.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL CONFIRMATION NO. 24 OF 1915.

Mr. Justice Hayward.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

DAJI YESABA—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 374, 376—Murder case—Trial by Jury—Reference—Appeal—High Court—Practice—Confirmation of sentence.

Batchelor, J.—In the Bombay High Court where a prisoner has been sentenced to death, even though the conviction was had on the unanimous verdict of a Jury, the whole case is re-opened before the High Court both on matters of fact as well as on matters of law. [p. 995 col. 1.]

Hayward, J.—In the High Court in murder cases it is always necessary to consider the evidence in support of the facts found by the Jury in order to ascertain that there had been no misdirection in the charge to the Jury and to determine whether it would or would not be proper in all the circumstances to confirm the sentence of death passed by the Sessions Judge. [p. 995, col. 1.]

Criminal confirmation in conviction and sentence passed by the Sessions Judge of Belgaum.

Mr. V. R. Sirur, for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—The appellants before us, who are five in number, were convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Belgaum of the offence of murder. The conviction followed upon the unanimous verdict of the Jury.

Of the five accused persons before the Sessions Court, Nos. 3 and 4, Daji bin Yesaba and Bhima bin Shidlinga, were sentenced to death, that sentence being subject to this

EMPEROR v. BRIKHBHAN SINGH.

Court's confirmation. The other three accused were sentenced to transportation for life.

It appears to be the practice of this Court that where a prisoner has been sentenced to death, even though the conviction was had on the unanimous verdict of a Jury, the whole case is re-opened before the High Court both on matters of fact as well as on matters of law. In deference to that practice, we have allowed Mr. Sirur, for the accused Nos. 3 and 4, to address us on all matters of evidence in the appeals. I desire, however, to reserve my own opinion as to the correctness of the practice to which I have alluded, should the question of its correctness ever arise for judicial decision.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur that the marks found on the body and the signs of struggle on the ground together with the evidence of the eye-witness, establish that this was a case not of suicide but of murder. I also concur that the evidence of the witnesses together with the confessions of the accused has shown beyond any reasonable doubt that it was the accused who were guilty of conspiring together to commit this murder. There is no good ground in my opinion for interfering with the sentences of death passed by the learned Sessions Judge.

I desire to add this on the attitude to be adopted in scrutinizing proceedings submitted for confirmation: that no considered case has been cited before us in which it was held up on full argument that the evidence in support of the facts found by the Jury, is laid open by the mere submission to the unrestricted judgment of the confirming Court. It would, no doubt, always be necessary to consider that evidence in order to ascertain that there had been no misdirection in the charge to the Jury and to determine whether it would or would not be proper in all the circumstances, to confirm the sentence of death passed by the Sessions Judge. But should the question, whether anything more than this is permitted, be hereafter raised, it seems to me that the answer would entirely depend on the interpretation of the language used in sections 374 to 376 of the Criminal Procedure Code: and it is to be observed that the provisions of section 374 do not require the convictions but only the sentences of death to be submitted for confirmation by the High Court. It is no doubt true that section 375 authorizes further inquiry or the taking of additional evidence in proper cases and that section 376 gives power to acquit or alter the conviction whether the trial were with Assessors or a Jury. But the cases there contemplated, might well be cases in which there had been an error of law, such as improperly withholding evidence from or misdirection in the charge to the Jury. And it is significant that under the proviso to section 376, it is only after the disposal of any appeal which would only lie on a matter of law where the trial was by Jury under section 418 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that the powers of confirmation or otherwise of the sentence of death can be exercised by the High Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 165—Search without warrant—Specification of property to be searched—Illegal search—Resistance—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 332.

Where a Police Officer authorizes another to make a search without a warrant from a Magistrate, he should give the authority in writing specifying the thing or things which are to be searched for. Section 165 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not authorize a general search on the chance that something may be found. [p. 997, cols. 1. & 2.]

An accused offering resistance to the Police making an illegal search is not guilty of an offence under section 332 of the Penal Code. [p. 995, col. 1.]

Mr. A. E. Ryves (Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Eighteen accused persons were put on their trial on charges of rioting, dacoity, wrongful restraint and obstructing the Police in discharging their duty. The learned Additional Sessions Judge acquitted the accused and Government have appealed. It appears that a dacoity had taken place at a place called Nagla Murli in the Agra District. Some sort of a conference had taken place at which the Deputy Inspector of Police was present. The persons attending this meeting, appear to have been the Circle Inspectors of the Agra District and the surrounding districts. It was there decided that searches should take place at the houses of persons who were suspected of having been concerned in the dacoity. The result of this meeting was that Chunni Singh, one of the Circle Inspectors of the Mainpuri District sent Mohammad Naim Khan, a Sub-Inspector of Jasrana (in the Mainpuri District) to Mahfuz Ali, one of the Circle Inspectors of the Agra District in whose Circle the dacoity is said to have taken place. Mahfuz Ali says that he gave a written authority to Naim Khan to search the house of one Nihal Singh and arrest him. In cross-examination, he stated "I wrote this that the house of Nihal Singh be searched in connection with the dacoity at Nagla Murli, that he might be arrested for the sake of identification and that the houses of those persons should also be searched who were suspected by the Sub-Inspector of receiving stolen property."

It may be noted here that Mohammad Naim Khan had nothing to do with the investigation of the dacoity which had taken place at Nagla Murli. It was outside his district, and, so far as the evidence goes, there is nothing to show that Mohammad Naim Khan even knew what property had been stolen in the dacoity. It is here desirable to mention who Nihal Singh was. Nihal Singh was not a resident of the Mainpuri District. He had belonged to the Agra District. Proceedings had been taken against him in the year 1912 under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. He had been bound over and his father-in-law, Bindrabhan Singh, accused No. 2, had gone security for him. Whether it was that Bindrabhan Singh having gone security for his son-in-law, wished to keep an eye upon him, or whether he was anxious that no false accusation might be made against him, the fact remains that Nihal Singh had gone to reside with his father-in-law in the village of Malikpur in the Mainpuri District. It would appear that on the 4th of December 1914, a search had been made at the house of Bindrabhan

Singh. How far this search was legal, we are not in a position to say but the search was not in connection with anything wrong that Bindrabhan had done. The search must have been in some way connected with Nihal Singh. On the 20th of December, that is to say 16 days afterwards, Mohammad Naim Khan with two constables, Sunder Singh and Debi Singh, arrived at the house of Bindrabhan Singh between 10 and 11 A. M. He was met in the village by Hakim Singh and Naubat Singh (brother of Hakim Singh), Hakim Singh being the Mukhia of the village, though he lived in a neighbouring village. According to the Police when they arrived at the house, Nihal Singh at once came out and said "you have searched the house shortly before and now you are going to search it again;" he asked them to fight it out before they searched the house. Immediately a number of other persons arrived, they began to beat the Sub-Inspector and the constables, the Sub-Inspector fired three shots from a revolver in self-defence, the revolver was snatched away and the Police were badly beaten. They were put into a cell, shut up, their uniforms and turbans taken from them, and they were only released after some persons belonging to a neighbouring village came to their rescue. This is the story told by the Police.

A number of the accused persons admitted that they had assaulted the Police. That the Police were assaulted and beaten, there is not the least doubt. But the story of the accused, (at least of those who admit having taken any part in the affair) is that the Police arrived whilst all the male members of the house were still at work in the fields, and forced their way into the presence of the women where they asked for Nihal Singh, that they abused the women, that the women raised an outcry which brought Chotey Singh, a young Thakur aged about 24 years (a son of Brikhbhan Singh and brother-in-law of Nihal Singh) to the house, he remonstrated with and abused the Police, and that thereupon the Sub-Inspector deliberately fired at him. Chotey Singh admits that he was stooping to pick up a lathi when he was fired upon by the Sub-Inspector. The accused then say that they took away the revolver from the Police Inspector to prevent his shooting other persons, and that it was necessary to do so. They admit that they used lathis but say that they only did so after Chotey Singh had been shot down.

The first matter that requires some consideration is how far the visit of the Police to the house of Brikbhan Singh was legal. It is obvious that the main object of the visit was to search the house. It may even be doubted whether there was ever the least intention of arresting Nihal Singh, except perhaps in the event of suspicious property being found in the house. A search without a warrant from a Magistrate can only be made under the provisions of section 165 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That section provides as follows:—"Whenever an officer in charge of a Police station, or a Police Officer making an investigation, considers that the production of any document or thing is necessary to the conduct of an investigation into any offence which he is authorised to investigate, and there is reason to believe that a person to whom a summons or order under section 94 has been or might be issued, will not or would not produce such document or thing according to the directions of the summons or order, or when such document or thing is not known to be in the possession of any person, such officer may search, or cause search to be made, for the same, in any place within the limits of the station of which he is in charge, or to which he is attached."

Clause 3.—"If he is unable to conduct the search in person, and there is no other person competent to make the search, present at the time, he may require any officer subordinate to him to make the search, and he shall deliver to such subordinate officer, an order in writing, specifying the document or thing for which search is to be made, and the place to be searched; and such subordinate officer may thereupon search for such thing in such place."

We may assume (but only for the purposes of argument) that Mahfuz Ali could have authorised Naim Khan to make the search without a warrant from a Magistrate. But even on this assumption, it was necessary when Mahfuz Ali was not making the search himself that he should have delivered in writing to Naim Khan an order specifying the thing or things which were to be searched for. The section does not authorise a general search on the chance that something may be found. There is no evidence that any such specification was ever given. So far as the evidence goes, there was no such specification. We have nothing to show that Naim Khan knew what he was to search for. It seems very much as if the intention was to do the very thing we have said the section does not authorise. It lay on the prosecution to show that the action of the Police was legal and on the evidence, we find great difficulty in holding that Naim Khan was duly authorised to search the house of Bindraban Singh.

It is contended that while there may have been no legal authority for the search, there was nevertheless authority to arrest Nihal Singh. Arrest without warrant is provided for by section 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The first part of clause (1) is as follows:—"Any Police Officer may, without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant, arrest, first any person who has been concerned in any cognizable offence or against whom a reasonable complaint has been made, or credible information has been received, or a reasonable suspicion exists, of his having been so concerned."

Mahfuz Ali does not say that Nihal Singh had been concerned in the Nagla Murli dacoity, nor does he say that any complaint had been made that he had been concerned in it, or that any information to that effect had been received or that there was a reasonable suspicion of his having done so. He says in his evidence that the object of the arrest was identification. This presumably means that after his arrest, he was to be paraded for the purpose of being identified. It further appears extremely doubtful whether Mahfuz Ali Khan could himself have arrested Nihal Singh. He was a Circle Inspector of the Agra District. It is said that Naim Khan could have arrested Nihal Singh himself. Naim Khan could only have arrested Nihal Singh without a warrant under section 54. It is not even pretended that he was acting under the authority of this section. His authority to arrest (if any) was under the document which he had received from Mahfuz Ali. It would seem, therefore, that neither the search of the house, nor the alleged arrest of Nihal Singh was legal.

EMPEROR P. BEIKERHAN SINGH.

On the general merits of the case, there is, we fear, some reason to suspect the entire bona fides of the Police. We wish to say as little as possible, because the Police, of course, are not on their trial. It is necessary, however, where it is sought to set aside an acquittal, to consider the evidence and surrounding circumstances with the greatest care. It seems to us that if an application had been made to the Court either for a warrant for the arrest of Nihal Singh, or for an order for the search of the house, the Court would have hesitated to make that order if it had been informed that the house was not the house of Nihal Singh and that a search had already taken place there shortly before. The dacoity had taken place prior to the first search. A second search should not have been made without very good cause. In the first account which Muhammad Naim Khan gave of the occurrence, he said that it was a lathi blow struck by one of the accused which caused his revolver to go off accidentally. This was a deliberate untruth. The nature of the wound and other circumstances of the case including Naim Khan's own evidence at the trial, shows that his revolver did not go off by accident but was fired off on purpose, and there is very strong ground for believing that he fired at Chotey deliberately. This untrue statement in his first report shows that the Sub-Inspector was not quite happy about the revolver shot. He mentions in his report a large number of persons who were present, at the time of the occurrence. Amongst other persons he mentioned as being present, was Sukha, the chowkidar, and Gulzari Lal, the patwari. Gulzari Lal was in the first place not charged with having taken part in the assault upon the Police. If Gulzari Lal did what Naim Khan, Sundar and Debi Singh said he did, he would have been one of the chief persons to blame for the assault on the Police. If he acted in the way that Hukam Singh and other prosecution witnesses allege, he was undoubtedly mainly responsible for every thing that occurred. Naim Khan in his evidence says that at the very commencement of the row Gulzari Lal said that "there was a day when Nihal Singh had left the village with a 'moror' on his head and that he was about to be taken away under arrest in the presence of the Thakurs. On this, all the persons named above, began to beat me and the constables. Being afraid of losing our lives, I took out my pistol and fired three times". This is not what the witness said when he made his first report. Sunder Singh says that Gulzari Lal said to the darogha "there was a day when Nihal Singh came into the village with a wedding crown on his head and there was a day when he would be led away as a prisoner in the presence of the Thakurs. Debi Singh deposes to the same effect. Hukam Singh says that Gulzari Lal "gave provocation" and said that there was a time when Nihal Singh had come to the village with a wedding crown on his head. Is it possible that in the lifetime of the Thakurs of the village, he should go away as a prisoner. On this, the persons who were on the chabutra came down and surrounded the darogha. The lathis began to be wielded on the darogha and the constables." It is not very probable that the patwari would have said anything of the kind or taken the part attributed to him even if his sympathies were more or less with the villagers. We find, however, that the Police themselves evidently did not believe the case against Gulzari Lal, because we find that Mr. Kemp, Superintendent of Police, at quite an early stage took steps to withdraw the case against Gulzari Lal as being weak and the evidence unconvincing. If Mr. Kemp's estimate of the evidence was correct, Muhammad Naim Khan, the two Sub-Inspectors, and Hukam Singh have all told a deliberate untruth and falsely accused Gulzari Lal.

There is some justification for the suggestion that Gulzari Lal was implicated because he would not support the Police story. There is another matter which is certainly far from satisfactory when considering the bona fides of the Police. Shortly before the trial, Naim Khan summoned a number of persons belonging to the village, including persons who were defence witnesses and held out a threat to them that if they harboured any of the accused, they would be liable to punishment. Considering the circumstances of the case, we doubt whether this warning was necessary in the interest of justice, and it certainly had a tendency to frighten the witnesses who would be called for the defence. It does not seem as if there was any need for the threat, for a Police guard of 10 or 12 men had been placed in the village. There is yet another circumstance which deserves some consideration. It appears that immediately after the occurrence, the accused or some one for them sent a telegram to the Collector. This seems to suggest that the accused at that time looked upon themselves as aggrieved persons and were appealing to the authorities. If the accused had done what the Police say they did, it is rather difficult to understand why it was, they, so to speak, took the Sub-Inspector and his two constables into custody. We are quite satisfied that when the witness Daryai Singh and certain other persons came to Malikpur after the fight was over, there was not the smallest attempt on the part of the villagers to conceal where the Police were. The evidence of Daryai on this point we believe to be true and the evidence of Baldeo we believe to be false. The Sub-Inspector and his two constables were given up at once, they were given milk and water to drink and proceeded upon their way in Gajadhar's cart.

It is contended that even on the assumption that there was no legal justification for a search or for the arrest, nevertheless, the accused were guilty of the other charges, namely, under sections 147, 395 and 342 of the Indian Penal Code, because they had no right of self-defence, having regard to the provisions of section 99 of the Indian Penal Code. This argument might have some force if we could think that the Police had, even after the mistake, honestly come forward and told us exactly what had happened. We have pointed out that there are substantial reasons for thinking that the account given by the accused is more probable than the account given by the Police. If we assume it possible that the Police had really made their way into the female apartments in the absence of the male members, and that the moment Chotey arrived, they shot him down, we could hardly say that the accused could be held guilty for what subsequently occurred, or that the Police could claim protection under section 99. There is no doubt that the Police were beaten and that lathis were used, at the same time, none of the injuries were of a very serious nature,—no bones were broken. We also fear that there is reason to think that a number of persons who took no part in the occurrence and who were at worst only onlookers, were implicated; for example, Pokhpal Singh who is apparently quite blind of one eye and almost blind of the other. He cannot walk without the support of a stick. With the exception of Daryai Singh, there is not one of the prosecution witnesses, we can trust. Hakim Singh we consider quite unworthy of belief. He implicates Gulzari Lal whom he did not implicate in his first report. According to the Police, he went away when the row began and yet he pretends to give evidence as to what occurred right up to the end of the row.

It is alleged that the accused stole the uniforms of the Police. This is a matter which is surrounded with mystery. From the very first, the principal accused never pretended that they did not know that it was the Police who had come to the house. What object the accused would have in stealing the uniforms of the Police, it is difficult to understand. It is quite clear that they did not want to keep possession of the uniforms; it would have been most dangerous for them to do so. They would not have kept them for the purpose of concealing the marks of blood, because the injuries done to the Police were perfectly apparent on their bodies. It is just possible that they might have kept the uniforms thinking Chotey had been killed and wishing to retain them as evidence of the identity of the persons who were responsible for his death. Under the circumstances, and having regard to the evidence on the record, we feel by no means certain that the Police were wearing their uniforms on the day in question. It is, however, impossible for us to be certain one way or the other upon this point.

The judgment of the learned Sessions Judge has been criticised but we are very far from thinking that he did not arrive at a very fair estimate of the truth of the case. After carefully considering the evidence, we have come to the conclusion that there is no reason for interfering with the judgment of the Court below. We accordingly dismiss the appeal. We direct that those of the accused who are in custody, shall be released at once and the warrants against those who are said to have absconded, are cancelled.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—This is an appeal by one Nathu Rewa from a conviction by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad of the offence of robbery committed between sun-set and sun-rise on the highway under the 2nd part of section 392 of the Indian Penal Code.

The proceedings leading up to this conviction are of an unusual character. The accused was originally committed to the Court of Session by the Magistrate under section 392 of the Indian Penal Code, and, on the 30th of July, the trial of the accused began before the Additional Sessions Judge. The Public Prosecutor, however, added charges under sections 214 and 411 of the Indian Penal Code over and above the charge under section 392. On the three charges, the trial proceeded up to the point where the Assessors gave the opinion. The Assessors' opinions having been recorded, the learned Additional Sessions Judge reserved judgment. When, however, he came to write his judgment, he found himself to be of opinion that the trial had been illegal, inasmuch as the third charge under section 214 of the Indian Penal Code had been improperly joined. He, therefore, in his own words, "cancelled the trial and decided to hold a fresh trial against the accused." This he conceived himself empowered to do under section 537, clause (a), of the Criminal Procedure Code. The new trial was accordingly held and the accused has been convicted as stated, though both the Assessors were of opinion that the offence imputed had not been proved.

It appears to me that the present trial was invalid on the ground that the learned Additional Sessions Judge had no authority to cancel or set aside the trial which had originally been held. That trial, as I have said, had proceeded to the point where nothing remained but the delivery of judgment. And under section 309 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Assessors' opinions having been recorded, the Judge had no option but to give his judgment in accordance with the Code.

It is not, I think, arguable that section 537, clause (a) to which the learned Judge appeals, invested him with authority to cancel his own completed trial. That section must be read in the light of the interpretation placed upon it by the Privy Council in Subrahmanian Ayyar v. Emperor (1), where it was laid down that "the section cannot avail to cure the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial."

PRAG DAS BHARGAVA V. DAULAT RAM.

Here it seems to me that there was disobedience to the express provision of the Code as to the mode in which trials should be conducted. I am of opinion, therefore, that all the proceedings before the learned Additional Sessions Judge must now be set aside.

We have heard the learned Pleaders on the merits of the case in order to guide our judgment to a decision as to whether we should or should not order a re-trial. Having heard all that can be said on both sides, and having regard to the peculiar circumstances of the case and the evidence on the record, we are of opinion that there is no good ground for ordering a re-trial. The accused must be acquitted and discharged, and his bail bond will be discharged.

Held, that the Magistrate at Agra had no jurisdiction to try the accused under sections 420 and 265 of the Penal Code inasmuch as the discovery of the alleged fraud at Agra after the goods were delivered, could not be said to be a 'consequence which has ensued' within the meaning of section 179 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Peary Lal Bansrji, for the Applicants.

Mr. A. H. O. Hamilton, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Prag Das Bhargava and Kundan Lal have been charged with offences under sections 420 and 265 of the Indian Penal Code. It is alleged that the complainant was cheated, that is to say, that he was induced to part with his money at Meerut on the false representation that a certain barrel contained a certain amount of spirits. When the barrel reached Agra, it is alleged that it was discovered that the barrel did not contain the amount of spirit that it had been represented to contain. The charge under section 265 is that the accused used a wrong measure. Undoubtedly if a wrong measure was used it was used in Meerut. The applicants complain that the Magistrate in Agra had no jurisdiction to enquire into the case. Section 177 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that every offence shall ordinarily be enquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed. In my opinion, the alleged offences, if committed, were committed in Meerut and not at Agra and, therefore, prima facie section 177 applies. Section 179 is as follows:—When a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done, and of any consequence which has ensued, such offence may be enquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done, or any such consequence has ensued." There are several illustrations given to the section. The first is "A is wounded within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court, X, and dies within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Z. The offence of culpable homicide of A may be enquired into or tried either by X or Z." I think it is quite clear that section 179 does not apply to the circumstances of the present case. The accused are not charged with the commission of any offence "by reason of anything which has been done or any consequence which has ensued at Meerut." The discovery of the alleged fraud at Agra after the goods were delivered, cannot be said to be a "consequence which has ensued" within the meaning of this section. I am quite satisfied that the Magistrate at Agra has no jurisdiction. The learned Magistrate may be informed of this judgment.

Criminal appeal against an order of acquittal passed by the Cantonment Magistrate of Allahabad.

Mr. A. E. Ryces (Government Advocate), for the Crown.

Mr. R. K. Sorabji, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Government appeal against an order of acquittal passed by a Magistrate of the first Class in the case of two persons Mian Din and Farid-ud-din who were charged with an offence under section 3 of the Public Gambling Act III of 1867. The Magistrate passed his order on the finding that the spot where the gambling was taking place was not a "place" within the meaning of section 1 or section 3 of the Act. In section 1, a common gaming-house is defined as any house, walled enclosure, room or place in which cards, dice, tables or other instruments of gaming are kept or used for the profit or gain of the person owning, occupying, using or keeping such house, enclosure, room or place etc. The spot where the gambling is said to have taken place in the present case, is the lower end of a bullock-run of a disused well on a bit of open land where there are some trees and a small hut. Round the sides of the bullock-run, in the shape of a semi-circle, has been raised a low wall of loose-bricks and it is within the shelter of this low brick wall, that the gambling is said to have taken place. The Magistrate has passed his opinion that it is not a 'place' within the meaning of the Act relying on ruling to be found as Abbi v. Queen-Empress (1) and on Queen-Empress v.

Jagannayakulu (2). He refused to follow Emperor v. Fattoo Mahomed Sher Mahomed (3). In our opinion, the place where the gambling is said to have occurred in the present case, falls within the definition of the word "place" in the Act. The question was discussed with some detail in the judgment in Emperor v. Fattoo Mahomed Sher Mahomed (3). In the Bombay Act, the words are "whoever, being the owner or occupier or having the use of any house, room or place, opens, keeps or uses the same for the purpose of a common gaming-house." The only difference between the Bombay Act and the Act which is in force in this Province is that the words "walled enclosure" are added in the latter. The section runs "Having the use of any house, walled enclosure, room or place." The Bombay Judges in their judgment, refer to certain English cases in which a decision was given in regard to the meaning of the word "place" in sections 1, 2 and 3 of the English Betting Act which prohibit the use for betting of any house, office, room or other place. We agree with them that there is no reason to suppose that the word "place" in either of the two Indian Statutes, has any more narrow or restricted meaning than it has in the English Statute. In Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Company (4), Lord Halsbury remarked as follows:—"I think in this respect with Rigby, L. J., that any place which is sufficiently definite, and in which a betting establishment might be conducted, would satisfy the words of the Statute." Lord James of Hereford remarked:—"There must be a defined area so marked out that it can be found and recognised as the 'place' where the business is carried on and wherein the bettor can be found." In the Bombay case, the place which was under consideration, was a piece of open land on which there was neither roof nor wall but which was surrounded by houses and was approached by a narrow lane. In our opinion, in the case which is now before us, the spot where the gambling is said to have taken place, was a sufficiently defined area so marked out that it could be found and recognised as the place where the business of betting was being carried on. The argument has been raised that the adjective "walled" in Act III of 1867, applies not only to the noun 'enclosure' but also to the two nouns 'room or place.' With this, we cannot agree. It is clear that the word "walled" is applied only to the word "enclosure." It could hardly in common parlance be used with the word "room." We, therefore, are of opinion that the decision of the Magistrate in so far as the meaning of the word "place" is concerned is incorrect, and we must, therefore, set aside the order of acquittal. At the same time, the case is one of a very trivial nature. The accused have been subjected practically to two trials, one in the Court below, and one in this Court, and we think that the ends of justice have been sufficiently met. We, therefore, do not direct that the accused be again placed upon their trial.

Order set aside.

Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (Act IV of 1887), s. 3—Instrument of gaming—"Means of gaming," meaning of—Book recording bets, whether a means of gaming.

The word 'means' as used in section 3 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, 1887, having regard to the inclusive character of the definition in which it has been used, includes a thing or article which has been specially contrived and used to promote and facilitate the wagering.

A green book used for making entries of the bets made by those engaged in the wagering which could not be conveniently conducted otherwise than with or by means of this green book, is a 'means' or 'instrument' of gaming within [the definition in section 3 of the Act.

Criminal application for revision against conviction and sentence recorded by the Third Presidency Magistrate of Bombay.

Mr. Jinnah (with him Mr. T. R. Desai), for the Applicant.

Mr. Bahadurji, (acting Advocate General), (with him Mr. Nicholson, Public Prosecutor), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—In this case, the applicant, Manilal Mangalji, has been convicted by the learned Third Presidency Magistrate of managing or assisting in conducting the business of a common gaming house under section 4 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act IV of 1887, and has been sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment.

The only point of law urged by the learned Counsel for the applicant is that a certain green book, in which were recorded entries of the bets made by those frequenting the room managed by the applicant, is not an instrument of gaming within the definition of that term in section 3 of the Act. Unfortunately, however, for this argument, a Bench of this Court has decided against it in the case of Emperor v. Lakhamshi (1), which followed the decision in Emperor v. Tribhorandas (2), where the judgment of Mr. Justice Fulton was presumably specially relied upon. We are bound by the decision of Emperor v. Lakhamshi (1), unless we are prepared to refer the matter to a Full Bench. That I am not prepared to do, though I recognize that in view of the divergence of judicial opinion to which this topic has given rise, my own view must be expressed with diffidence. Speaking for myself, then, I agree with the decision of Emperor v. Lakhamshi (1). It is to be observed that the definition in section 3 of the Act, is an inclusive definition, the words reading that the "expression 'instruments of gaming' includes any article used as a subject or means of gaming." The whole argument has turned—and I think rightly turned—upon the correct signification of the word 'means' in this definition. Now as there is nothing to the contrary in the Act, it is clear that the word 'means,' which is a popular word and not a term of art, must be construed in its popular sense, that is to say, in the sense in which the word would have been understood amongst ordinary Englishmen the day after the Statute was passed: see Reg v. Commissioners of Income Tax (3), which was affirmed in Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income Tax v. Pemsell (4) and Fusilier, Blish v. Simpson (5), where Dr. Lushington said "one of the rules of construing Statutes, and a wise rule too, is, that they shall be construed loquitur ut vulgus, that is, according to the... common understanding and acceptance of the terms." So far as I am able to understand the current usage of this ordinary word 'means,' I should say, having regard particularly to the inclusive character of the definition which we are interpreting, that it must include a thing or article, such as this green book which was specially contrived and used to promote and facilitate the wagering. I say it was specially contrived and used for this purpose, because in fact it contains nothing but pencilled memoranda of the wagers made. Mr. Jinnah has contended that the wagering might conceivably have been carried on without the assistance of a book to record the wagers, and that no doubt is so. But the question is, when a book is in fact used so as to record the wagers, what is the position of that book? Is it or is it not a 'means' of wagering within the definition? In our present case, as it appears to me, the reasonable inference is that it was found by those engaged in this wagering that the wagering could not conveniently be conducted otherwise than with or, I think I may say, by means of this green book; in other words, it was found desirable to maintain this book as a method or, I think, a means of carrying on the wagering which, without it, could not have been carried on without great or insuperable difficulties. For these reasons, though I am sensible of the difficulty created by the divergent view expressed by other single Judges in Queen-Empress v. Kanji Bhimji (6), and Jesang Motilal v. L. T. 446; 57 W. R. 294; 53 J. P. 198. (4) (1891) A. C. 531; 61 L. J. Q. B. 265; 65 L. T. 621; 56 J. P. 805. (5) (1864) 34 L. J. Adm. 25; 3 Moore P. C. (N. s.) 51; 11 Jur. (N. s.) 289; 12 L. T. (N. s.) 186; 13 W. R. 592; 16 E. R. 19; 146 R. R. 2. (6) 17 B. 184.

Emperor (7), it is my opinion that the case of Emperor v. Lakhamji (1), was correctly decided, and that we ought now to follow it and hold that the green book in the case before us, was a 'means' or 'instrument' of gaming within the definition in the Act.

That being so, the conviction in this case must be affirmed; and though Mr. Jinnah has addressed us on the question of sentence, I see no reason whatever to suppose that the sentence in this case was one whit too severe.

I would, therefore, discharge the Rule.

HAYWARD, J.—The applicant used the green book now before us in his room kept for registering Teji Mandi wagers on the results of the cotton sales in Liverpool, and he has, in consequence, been convicted of keeping a common gaming house under section 4 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act. It has not been disputed on behalf of the applicant that he so used the green book. But it has been contended that the green book so used, was not an instrument of gaming and that, therefore, the applicant was not legally guilty of keeping a common gaming house under the Act.

Now it appears that the original legislative prohibition was directed merely against gaming, in the ordinary sense of the word, that is to say, against playing for stakes or betting at sports or pastimes as was pointed out in the rain betting case of 1889, Queen-Empress v. Narottamdas Motiram (8). Thereafter, the prohibition was extended to include betting on other events under the term 'wagering' by the insertion of these definitions: "In this Act the expression 'instruments of gaming' includes any article used as a subject or means of gaming;" and "in this Act the word 'gaming', whenever it occurs, shall include wagering" by the amending Act of 1890. The question, therefore, which we have to decide is, whether the green book before us was used as a 'means' of 'gaming'; or rather to substitute the word which we must substitute under the definition as a 'means' of 'wagering'. It seems to me that the green book would, in ordinary language, be said to have been used as a 'means' of carrying on this particular form of wagering. It is difficult to believe in the circumstances disclosed, that any persons would, without some such record, have been induced to enter into these wagering transactions. Whether that is a correct interpretation or not, has, however, been laid open to doubt by the dicta on former occasions of certain of the Judges of the Benches of this Court. Those dicta, therefore, require careful consideration. In Queen-Empress v. Kanji Bhimji (6), decided soon after the amendment Act, while Parsons, J., held that it was a question of fact for determination in each case whether account books were instruments of wagering; Telang, J., doubted whether they could ever be instruments of wagering. He considered that they were too remotely connected with wagering and were merely helps to the preservation of evidence relating to the completed wagering transaction. In the Opium Sales Case, Emperor v. Tribhovandas (2), while, Fulton, J., was of opinion that the account books used to record the wagers, were, on that account alone, used as a 'means' of wagering; Candy, J., held that these were so used as they were especially contrived and were not merely helps to the preservation of evidence of the wagering transactions. In the Teji Mandi case, Emperor v. Lakhamji (1), both Judges concurred that even slips of paper used to record the wagers were, no less than account books, used as a 'means' of wagering. But in the most recent case Jesang Motilal v. Emperor (7), Beaman, J., doubted whether such slips of papers or account books could ever be instruments of wagering. It appears, however, that Macleod, J., was not prepared to share his doubts and those doubts were not acted upon, so that there was no decision upon the matter by the Bench.

It appears, therefore, that the interpretation which has commended itself to us as the plain meaning of the language used, is the interpretation approved by the only previous decision directly in point which can be regarded as a binding decision of a Bench of this Court. We ought, therefore, to discharge this Rule and confirm the conviction. The sentence of one month's rigorous imprisonment is, further, not unduly severe in the case of a keeper of a common gaming house, the suppression of which is the special object of these Acts of the Legislature.

The mere fact that a Court advisedly refrained from administering oath to a witness, who was a child of tender years, does not make his statement inadmissible in evidence. A Court should only examine a child of tender years as a witness after it has satisfied itself that the child is intellectually sufficiently developed to enable it to understand sufficiently what he has seen and to afterwards inform the Court thereof. If the Court is of opinion that by reason of tender years, the child is unable to do this, it ought not only to refrain from administering oath but from examining the child at all. If, on the other hand, the Court thinks that the child, though of tender years, is capable of informing the Court of what it has seen or heard, it is best that the Court should comply with the provisions of section 6 of the Oaths Act. [p. 1006, col. 2.]

Mr. A. E. Ryces (Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Dhani Ram and Chotey Lal have been found guilty of the murder of Durga Prasad and sentenced to death. They have appealed. The second accused is the son of the first accused. The deceased was the only son of Sobha Ram, a brother of the first accused. The first accused had another son called Salig who died childless leaving a widow Musammal Deo Kunwar. On the 16th August 1911, Durga Prasad made a Will in favour of the second accused leaving him all his property. Beyond all question, Durga

Prasad was most brutally murdered. Dhani Ram in the Court below admitted the murder and he admits it in his petition of appeal. Chotey, however, denies his guilt. The case for the prosecution is that the motive for the murder was to anticipate the succession to Durga Prasad's property and to prevent him incurring more debts, mortgaging or dealing with his property or cancelling the Will. Dhani Ram says that he murdered the deceased because he caught him in the act of having sexual intercourse with Mussumat Deo Kunwar. The family house is divided into three parts. The two accused lived in the western portion. Durga Prasad lived in the eastern portion. There was another brother of the first accused named Behari. He died leaving a son Choke Lal (not to be confused with the second accused). This Choke Lal lived in the central part. Two doors lead from Dhani Ram's portion into Choke Lal's and there is an open courtyard which belonged half to Durga Prasad and half to Choke Lal. On the morning of May 18th, at day break the second accused went to Tota Ram chowkidar and told him that Dhani Ram wanted him. He and another chowkidar went to the house and found Durga Prasad lying dead. Dhani Ram said that four men Sri Pal, Umrao, Pearay Lal and Ram Sarup had killed Durga Prasad. A report to that effect was made at the thana by Dhani Ram. It is now admitted that this charge was absolutely false. This gives some idea of the class of men the accused are. It is impossible to believe that the second accused did not know of the false charge that was being made against four innocent men, he must also have known that Durga Prasad was lying dead. The learned Sessions Judge has given the most cogent reasons for not believing the story that the deceased was murdered because he was caught in the act of illicit connection with the Mussumat. This charge is like the charge made against the four men, an absolute lie. We are quite satisfied that the woman was not even in the house at the time and that the motive was to get rid of Durga Pershad so as to get his property. The evidence against Dhani Ram is overwhelming and he admits it even now.

4 We proceed to consider the case as against the second accused. It is improbable that the father would have committed the murder alone. If we are correct in the view we take of the motive, Chotey had a greater motive than the father.

A little boy of the name of Ram Rup, aged about six years, was examined in the Court below. His statement is beyond question of the utmost importance. It directly implicates and if believed, brings home guilt to the second accused. There is evidence that the boy made the same statement immediately after the murder. One of the grounds of appeal was based on the decision in Queen-Empress v. Maru (1). The objection was that the learned Judge having "advisedly" refrained from administering the oath to the little boy, his statement is inadmissible. We are not prepared to accept altogether the ruling in the case of Queen-Empress v. Maru (1). No doubt section 6 of the Indian Oaths Act X of 1873 provides that (save as in the section provided) every witness shall make an oath. Section 13 of the Act, however, provides that no omission to take any oath, shall invalidate any proceeding or render inadmissible any evidence whatever in or in respect of which such omission took place. We are unable to hold that the mere fact that the Court advisedly refrained from administering the oath, renders the statement of the witness inadmissible. In our opinion, a Court should only examine a child of tender years as a witness after it has satisfied itself that the child is intellectually sufficiently developed to enable it to understand sufficiently what it has seen and to afterwards inform the Court thereof. If the Court is of opinion that by reason of tender years, the child is unable to do this, it ought not only to refrain from administering the oath but from examining the child at all. If on the other hand the Court thinks that the child, though of tender years, is capable of informing the Court of what it has seen or heard, it is best that the Court should comply with the provisions of section 6 in the case of a child just as in the case of any other witness. Whether or not, a child should be examined, must depend on the circumstances of the particular case including, of course, the nature of the evidence he is about to give. It seems to us pretty clear from the record that the boy Ram Rup was intelligent. We thought it nevertheless advisable to examine the boy ourselves, the charge being the grave one of murder. We accordingly had the boy produced before us in the presence of the accused, the oath was duly given and the witness examined. Having seen and heard the boy, we have not the least hesitation in saying that he was quite capable of giving evidence in the case. The Committing Magistrate examined the boy on oath and appears to have been favourably impressed. As already stated, this appeared from the record itself. Not only was the boy examined on the direct but he was cross-examined at considerable length on behalf of the accused. In many ways, it is much more difficult to tutor a child than an older person. The child may no doubt learn a story, but it would be very difficult to prepare a child for questions on cross-examination outside the story. Furthermore a child of tender years finds it difficult to disguise the fact that he has been tutored. When the matters deposed to, are not beyond the intelligence of the child, he is frequently a most satisfactory witness. His tender years render him less capable of deceiving the Court. In the trial Court, Ram Rup was asked if he had seen Chote's sister-in-law (the woman with whom the first accused said he caught the deceased in the act of sexual intercourse) the boy said he did not see her that day, that she lived in her father's house. We think if the woman had been in the house, the boy most certainly would have said so. The question was asked by the Court. The statement which the 1st accused has made throughout corroborates the boy in so far as the boy says that he witnessed the occurrence. If Choke tutored his little son, he need only have tutored him to substitute the 2nd accused for himself. He need not have tutored him to deny the presence of the woman. Ram Rup in the Court below stated that he had seen the two accused hitting Durga Prasad. He said that Dhani Ram used a lathi and Chote a gandasa. In the Court below, some point was made that the story of the gandasa must be untrue. The learned Sessions

Judge points out that it does not necessarily follow that because the wounds on the body do not appear to have been inflicted by sharp edged weapon, neither accused had a gandasa. The side of the gandasa or the back have been used. The little boy still adheres to the statement that there was a gandasa. There is a discrepancy between his evidence before us and his statement in the Court below when he states before us that both the accused had lathis. The real important matter for consideration with respect to the evidence of this witness is not whether he is accurate in every detail but whether it is possible that he has been tutored by his father Choke to substitute the second accused for him. As we have already stated, the first accused has admitted all along that Durga Prasad was murdered by him and that another man was with him but he says that the second man was Choke and not his son Chote. According to the evidence of Gokul Chand, the little boy stated that Durga Prasad had been killed by Chote Lal and Dhani Ram immediately after the murder. Brij Basi says the same thing. We ourselves are quite satisfied that the little boy has told the truth when he says that both the accused committed the murder. It must be borne in mind that Choke, the father of this little boy, had no motive for murdering Durga Prasad. Chote, the second accused, had a motive. The Will was in his favour. It was he who went to fetch the chowkidar and told him that Dhani Ram wanted to see him. It is true that he did not tell the chowkidar why he was wanted but this fact is rather against Chote than in his favour. When he went to fetch the chowkidar, he must have known that Durga Prasad was lying dead in the house. He must also have known that his father's charge against the four men was false. It seems to us much more probable that Chote would have been his father's accomplice in the murder than Choke.

After the boy Ram Rup had been examined before us, Dhani Ram put some questions and made a long statement reiterating that Durga Prasad was killed because he was caught in the act of having intercourse with the Musammât. Chote, the son, however, declined to ask any questions or make any statement. We believe that the old man is trying to save his son and that the probabilities are that the latter is morally speaking the more guilty of the two. We are quite satisfied that the evidence given on behalf of the 2nd accused that he was absent when the murder was committed, is false. This is shown by the evidence of Toto that it was the 2nd accused who came to him with the message that the 1st accused wanted him. The message was delivered very early in the morning.

After careful consideration of the case, we are quite satisfied that the unanimous opinion of the learned Sessions Judge and of the assessors is correct. We dismiss the appeal, confirm the convictions and sentences and direct that the latter be carried into execution according to law.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act I of 1898), ss. 423, 422, 367, 537 (a)—Appeal, dismissal of, after notice—Judgment, omission to write, effect of.

In an appeal dismissed not summarily but under section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code after notice given under section 422, it is incumbent under section 424 on the Magistrate to deliver a judgment which should fulfil the conditions laid down in section 367; in other words, the judgment must contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision.

Section 537 (a) cannot be invoked in a case in which the Court is concerned not with any omission or irregularity in a judgment but with the absence of a judgment.

Criminal application for revision from the decision of the District Magistrate of Belgaum, confirming the convictions and sentences passed by the second Class Magistrate of Paragad

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision which is made to us in the following circumstances.

The two accused persons were convicted by the second Class Magistrate of Paragad of criminal breach of trust under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code. From that conviction, they appealed to the District Magistrate, and that learned Magistrate, though he took a careful note of the arguments addressed to him by the Pleaders on both sides, passed his final order in the following words:—"The appeal is dismissed under section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It seems to us that that order cannot be sustained. Admittedly it was made under section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that is to say, the appeal was dismissed not summarily, but after notice given under section 422. That being so, under section 424 it was incumbent on the learned Magistrate to deliver a judgment which should fulfil the conditions laid down in section 367; in other words, the judgment must contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reasons for that decision. None of these matters is contained in the order under notice, and the result is that by the oversight of the learned District Magistrate, the applicant who by law is entitled to the independent opinion of the Appellate Court, has not had the benefit of that opinion expressed as the law requires that it should be expressed. We have, therefore, no option but to allow this application. For, it is clear that section 537 (a) cannot be invoked in such a case as this where we are concerned not with any omission or irregularity in a judgment, but with the absence of a judgment.

The District Magistrate's order must be reversed and the appeal must be remanded to him to be heard and decided in accordance with law. Rule made absolute.
